Turkey Files League Plea To Refortify Dardanelles

Intention to Denounce Lausanne Pact Offers Council Problem.

Action Is Parallel To That of Hitler

Notice Given Signatories Is Viewed as Overture for Negotiations.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, March 24.—Claiming the right to refortify the Dardanelles, the Bosphorus and the Sea of Marmora, Turkey today tossed a new problem into the lap of the League of Nations shortly after its Council adjourned with the Franco-German crisis deadlocked.

Failure of Germany and Italy to accept the Locarno Powers' accord—embodying proposals for solving the Rhineland question—obliged the Council to adjourn. It will sit again at Geneva after Great Britain, Italy, France, Germany and Belgium have reached an agreement.

Taking a cue from Chancellor Adolf Hitler's military reoccupation of the Rhineland, the Turkish government formally gave notice of its intention to claim the right to fortify the Dardanelles, the Bosphorus and the Sea of Marmora. This action, if carried out, would be a denunciation of the annex to the 1923 Treaty of Lausanne. Turkey will claim full sovereignty over the Dardanelles and the right to arm and defend 40 straits.

Impatience Shown.

Decision of the Council to adjourn was due largely to the impatience of its members whose governments are not signatory to the Locarno Treaty.

They said they did not wish to remain in London until Italy and Germany can be induced to accept the Locarno accord.

During the adjournment the Locarno powers will continue negotiations aimed to conclude a new European security arrangement.

Turkey's intentions were proclaimed during a private Council meeting when Tewfik Rusti Aras, Turkish foreign minister, began a declaration of his government's aims.

Stanley Bruce, of Australia, Council president, interrupted, explaining that the Treaty of Lausanne was not on the Agenda. He said the Turkinsh statement was irrelevant.

Aras at once proceeded to the British office, where he informed Foreign Minister Anthony Eden that Turkey intends to regain complete sovereignty over her straits.

Commenting on the Turkish action, an official spokesman said it constituted legal notice but, unlike Germany's reoccupation of the Rhineland, was not accompanied by an accomplished fact. It implied readiness to negotiate.

Would Be Kept Open.

The notice contained important exceptions, maintaining the principle of safeguarding the freedom of ships to pass through the Turkish straits in peace time and even in war time, unless Turkey should be a belligerent.

Turkey similarly notified other Lausanne signatories besides Britain, including France, Italy, Japan, Bulgaria, Greece, Rumania and Yugoslavia.

Britain for many years opposed Turkey's remilitarization of the straits. Recently, however, Turkey pledged herself to assist Britain if Italy attacked British vessels in the Mediterranean.

Joachim von Ribbentrop, Chancellor Adolf Hitler's diplomatic representative, arrived with the German reply, which made further plenary sessions of the Council useless until the Locarno signatories have settled their differences.

Members agreed that the only result of Council deliberations was to avert the threat of a general European war, at least for the time being.

Hitler Rejects Allies' Terms; League Council Rebuffs Him

Group Adjourns Upon Envoy's Arrival; Long Stalemate Likely.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 24.—Europe's crisis was thrown into a new and more complicated muddle tonight when Adolf Hitler refused outright to take his troops out of the Rhineland and rejected The Hague court as a tribunal.

Der Fuehrer's answer to the Locarno program, made public a few hours after the Council of the League of Nations suddenly adjourned, left the Rhineland dispute unsettled and with a long-drawn-out stalemate in prospect.

Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's special ambassador, arrived in London with a personal message to the British government from the German dictator just as the council broke up—an action which was interpreted in informed circles as a direct rebuff to Hitler for his long delay in answering the Locarno proposals.

Although the Locarno demands were emphatically rejected, the Reich said that on March 31—two days after the German reichstag election—it would "place at the disposal of the royal British government a comprehensive statement of its position, together with its positive proposals."

The Council will reconvene in Geneva some time after the German and French elections.

Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, was left with new difficulties in conciliating Franco-German differences but League circles seemed agreed that the immediate danger of European hostilities had been avoided.

JOACHIM VON RIBBENTROP.

A spokesman for the German delegation said that the British government's white paper outlining the Locarno proposals is "absolutely dead."

The House of Lords was told by Viscount Hailsham, lord chancellor, that Britain has "no secret understanding of any kind" with France or Belgium aside from those out-

Local 'Mystery' Woman Found Dead in Rooms

Secret of 'Mrs. M. Rodgers' Still Kept as Police Discover Body.

Mrs. Margaret Rodgers, 60, for 15 years an enigma to residents of an apartment house at 2323 Thirteenth street northwest, was found dead in her apartment yesterday, her mystery unrevealed.

Although death opened her rooms to the outside world for the first time during her residence in the apartment, it furnished no key, no reason, for the secrecy in which she clothed her life.

Mrs. Rodgers had not been seen since Friday. Knocks on her door brought no response. Policemen A. L. Embrey and J. O. Wood, of the Second Precinct, broke down the door. They found her lying on the floor. She had been dead for several days.

The officers made inquiries. From residents they pieced together a story, which an O. Henry or a Poe, with reason, might have undertaken to illuminate.

From a resident of 15 years occupancy it was learned that Mrs. Rodgers was living in the apartment when this man moved in.

Known as 'Mrs. M. Rodgers.'

She was known as Mrs. M. Rodgers. It was not until her death that correspondence found in her room indicated her name was Margaret.

During her long residence not one other occupant of the apartment house entered her rooms. The last time anyone was permitted in the rooms was four years ago, when the janitor, John Dorsey, was permitted to enter to make some repairs.

Only once every three days did Mrs. Rodgers leave her apartment, police were told, to purchase necessary food supplies. Yet then, if she met another resident, she was always smiling and cordial.

Visitor Once a Year.

Once a year, and only then, did the woman have a visitor, Dorsey said. This was at Christmas time, and the visitor was a son, whose name was not known, but who was understood to be from Atlantic City, N. J.

Mrs. Rodgers years ago had had the electricity in her room cut off. Her furniture was piled high with magazines, which police believe she read by candlelight.

In their investigation, police learned that Mrs. Rodgers was being treated for heart disease, and her death was attributed to that cause, but they learned nothing which threw light on the reason for her manner of living.

Lamson Jurors Are Discharged After 98 Hours

Panel Deadlocked in 9-3 Ballot for Conviction in Wife's Death.

By the United Press.

San Jose, Calif., March 24.—The jury which for 98 hours had deliberated wife murder charges against David Lamson, former Stanford University intellectual, was discharged today after it reported a hopeless deadlock.

The jury revealed it took ten ballots and stood 9 to 3 for conviction.

Lamson's pretty wife, Alene, was found dead in her bathtub in their Stanford campus home on the morning of Memorial Day, 1933. Her skull had been fractured.

At the first he was convicted and sentenced to death. He appealed. The second ended in a jury deadlock and the third a mistrial. The fourth—resulting in today's deadlock—began eight weeks ago.

Claimed Wife Fell.

The State charged Lamson, former executive of th eStanford University Press, killed his wife with a piece of pipe because of sex-frustration. He countered with the claim his wife fell in her bath.

The Lamsons were students at Stanford when they fell in love and married. He became a press executive and they made their home in one of the little Spanish cottages on the campus.

They were looked upon as an ideal couple and were popular in campus social life. Mrs. Lamson was pretty, vivacious. Lamson, though quiet, was known for his wit. Professors and scholars sought his counsel.

During Lamson's four trials the State sought to show that he strayed from the family fireside and became enmeshed with a titian-haired beauty in Sacramento. Mrs. Lamson, the prosecution said, learned of her husband's alleged duplicity and rebuffed him when he made advances.

Charges He Was Enraged.

Lamson, the prosecution further charged, became so enraged he ran into the yard, obtained the piece of pipe and struck her on the head. Then he returned to the yard, built a fire of weeds and debris and tossed the pipe into it.

The case became a political football in San Jose and Santa Clara County, with one faction demanding Lamson go to the scaffold and the other crying that he was being crucified and should be freed.

Lamson languished in the death house at San Quentin for more than a year. The child his wife had

Post's Flood Fund Near $1,000; Grayson Spurs Red Cross Drive

The day's gifts from several dozen sources totaled $262.27 and pushed the purse almost to the $1,000 mark—$991.77, to be exact.

In keeping with the spirit of subscribing whatever sum could be spared for a worthy cause, one resident, who asked to be listed as "A friend," sent in 27 cents.

There were many pledges of $1, while some ranged as high as $100.

Meanwhile, Red Cross headquarters announced collections totaling $1,474,000 in the coast-to-coast drive for $3,000,000.

As this heartening response to the appeal for funds became known, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Red Cross chairman, described the need as far greater than originally estimated.

He urged the thousands of chapters in the country to surpass the goals they have been assigned as a matter of "absolute necessity." He pointed to an increase of from 40,000 to 82,000 of the number of families receiving aid.

Incomplete totals for other States included New York, $208,325; Massachusetts, $166,849; Ohio, $123,134; Alabama, $1,294; Connecticut, $25,428; Delaware, $14,072; Florida, $14,765; Georgia, $14,153; Indiana, $22,712; Kentucky, $4,953; Louisiana, $2,503; Maine, $24,473; Maryland, $5,104; Mississippi, $2,288; New

5 Are Killed As Tornadoes Batter South

Winds Sweep Missouri, Tennessee, Texas; Loss Set at $1,500,000.

Cold Wave Grips West, Southwest; Dust Storm Rolls Eastward.

By the United Press.

Tornadic winds ripping savagely through deep South States last night left five dead, a score injured and property damage approximating $1,500,000.

Following in the wake of floods which ravaged the Northeast and furious black blizzards in the "dust bowl," the new attack of nature swept across Missouri, Texas and Tennessee to bring suffering and destruction to new sections of the Nation.

One man was killed, four injured and damage totaling $75,000 caused by a 34-mile-an-hour tornadic wind, electric storm and torrential rain at Memphis. One man was injured at Pulaski, Tenn., when debris from a wind-toppled smoke stack crushed him.

East Texas oil fields suffered damage totaling more than $1,000,000 early yesterday when tornadic winds smashed oil derricks, deroofed homes, airplane hangars and office buildings.

Four died in a tornado in south central Missouri.

Damage extended into Arkansas. In the Stuttgart (Ark.), area, damage was estimated at close to $30,000 as homes and buildings were unroofed, crops flattened, orchards uprooted and more than 100 power and telephone poles snapped.

The storm struck Memphis early Tuesday. C. B. Shelton, Dallas, Tex., was crushed and smothered to death when lightning struck the Memphis Ambassador Hotel and the third floor caved in.

Those injured in the hotel were Mrs. Rose Larkin, 68; Miss Rosella Larkin, 29; C. J. Chase, 50, and Ralph Barton, Savannah, Tenn.

Damage at Pulaski and Winchester, Tenn., totaled about $30,000. Oscar Word, of Pulaski, was struck by debris of a toppling chimney at Pulaski.

Buildings Smashed.

Dozens narrowly escaped death as frame and stone buildings were smashed by the wind or splintered by lightning in Tennessee.

Damage in Texas was centered at Tyler where it was estimated the toll would reach $500,000. Hail ripped through automobile tops. The extensive East Texas oil fields were hard hit. Plate glass windows were smashed and wires torn out.

Miss Pauline Rader, school teacher near Radertown, Mo., was the hero of the tornado in Missouri. When a dead calm followed strong winds and the sky grew black, she guessed a tornado was coming.

"Run outside and lie down," she told her 17 pupils. They obeyed and a minute later the twister struck the schoolhouse and carried it away.

Cold Wave Grips West.

Kansas City, March 24 (AP).—A tardy cold wave gripped the West and Southwest tonight as silt clouds from yesterday's dust storm rolled eastward to the Great Lakes.

Visibility at Grand Rapids, Mich., was reduced to a mile and a half this afternoon by dust clouds, carried from the Southwest on high winds. The silt left a gritty film in Chicago, St. Louis and central Missouri, extending south to east Texas.

Crisp, clear weather followed a beneficial snow storm in much of the "dust bowl" where the silt storm, worst of the season, blew yesterday.

Wintry weather descended on Oklahoma. All the western section of the State felt the chill of a snow storm that blanketed the "blow lands" of southeastern Colorado yesterday. Wheat farmers in the Colorado-Oklahoma region saw a renewed hope for crops in the storm.

Western Kansas was under snow, but weather observers said it was insufficient to be of much benefit to crops.

A terrific wind and hail storm lashed at Tyler, Longview and Kilgore, Tex., damaging crops and property to the extent of $500,000.

Farmers said the east Texas tomato and fruit crops suffered from hail stones, piled a foot deep in

Alcohol Ring Ship Seized, U. S. Asserts

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—United States Treasury agents tonight claimed to have "cracked" an international alcohol smuggling ring doing a gross business of $20,000,000 a year with seizure of the freighter Southern Sword.

Capt. Hugh Brown, master of the ship, was held under $5,000 bail today on a charge of conspiring with Austin Callahan, described as president of the Alco Steamship Co., to smuggle alcohol. Callahan was not arraigned, but Federal authorities said he was in Tombs prison.

The Southern Sword was detained off Staten Island last week and her crew of 30 has been questioned since that time.

W. E. Dunnigan, of the Treasury Department, said alcohol was supplied to the vessel by the British ship Isabel H., which slipped out of British waters near Bermuda and met the American ship off Ocean City, Md., on March 16.

District Faces Tax Increase Or Relief Cut

Allen Warns Senate That $3,000,000 Estimate Is Inadequate.

House, Meanwhile, to Act Today on Deficiency Appropriation.

By James D. Secrest.

The alternative of increased taxation or inadequate emergency relief funds faces the District, Commissioner George E. Allen stated yesterday while attending hearings before the Senate sub-committee handling the 1937 District supply bill.

Today the sub-committee will hear the Commissioners ask that the House appropriation for relief of $1,506,020 be doubled if all the needy in the National Capital are to be given a bare living. Commissioner Allen said that even the $3,000,000 estimate submitted to the Budget Bureau would be inadequate, $3,600,000 might do the job, he added.

At the same time the House will act upon a deficiency appropriation to be submitted by the House Appropriations Committee. The amount has not yet been disclosed, although Speaker Byrns said at his press conference he believed the sub-committee would recommend $350,000, which is $100,000 above the estimate proposed by the Budget Bureau, but little more than half of the $608,000 asked by District welfare officials.

Amount Not Revealed.

Chairman Buchanan and other sub-committee members refused to reveal how much the sub-committee will recommend to the full committee at a session this morning.

The Board of Public Welfare yesterday, anticipating a delay in obtaining the deficiency appropriation, decided to ask permission of Auditor Daniel J. Donovan to proceed next month with the expenditure of the $125,000 in relief funds that will remain on hand April 1.

This will mean that all employables will be cut off District relief rolls at the end of this month, although the board had previously threatened to stop all direct relief, including unemployables, on April 1 if the deficiency appropriations were not available by that time.

Because of the shortage of funds, 4,800 cases of employables, representing 20,300 persons, will be dropped unless the deficiency appropriation is restored to the $606,- asked by the Commissioners.

Remaining on relief will be 4,168 unemployables, representing 9,160 persons.

Commissioner Allen said that the House reduction of the United States lump-sum payment by $3,000,000 would necessitate a return to the $1.70 tax rate if adequate relief funds are to be appropriated. Restoration of the Federal contribution to $5,700,000 will alleviate the situation greatly, he said, but more revenue will still be necessary if Congress appropriates the full amount asked for relief by the commissioners.

The Senate sub-committee will conclude hearings of District officials by noon today, Chairman Thomas said, and will then adjourn until the middle of next week because the Oklahoma Senator will be out of the city.

Pleas Are Brief.

Although the hearings opened only Monday, the sub-committee has shown such a sympathetic understanding of the District's problems and needs that department heads have required only a brief time to plead for restoration of cuts made by the House.

Senator Thomas disclosed that the sub-committee has agreed to allow Representative Thomas L. Blanton, acting chairman of the corresponding House sub-committee, to appear before it upon his request. Thomas said that the full committee will be

Bail Move Denied To Edith Maxwell

Release on bail pending review of her case in the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals was denied Edith Maxwell, young school teacher, under 25-year sentence at Wise, Va., in the slipper slaying of Trigg Maxwell, her father, it was learned yesterday by Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, attorney retained by The Post Defense Fund.

Application for bond was filed by her brother, Earl Maxwell. It was refused by Bail Commissioner J. M. McLemore on advice of Judge H. A. W. Skeen, of Wise County Circuit Court.

Judge Skeen was quoted by McLemore as saying he never permitted the release on bond of persons convicted of first-degree murder. Miss Maxwell has been in jail since her conviction last November.

300, Sleep Disturbed, Souse Street Drillers

Dallas, March 24 (AP).—Three hundred residents of the Central Y. M. C. A., their sleep disturbed by workmen drilling holes in the street, turned fire hoses on them from all eight floors of the building and won their point early today.

Some of the workmen were knocked off their feet. Police, greeted by boos and catcalls, ordered the drillers to withdraw and return to their work in daylight hours.

Clements Resigns Post In Rift With Townsend Over Pension Policies

Townsend Aid Resigns

Robert E. Clements (right), second in command of the Townsend old-age pension organization, pictured with Dr. F. E. Townsend, with whom he had differences which resulted in his resignation yesterday.

Cofounder of Movement Quits as Its Secretary and Treasurer.

Still Favors Plan, But Bars 'Politics'

He Will Remain Here for House Investigation of Organization.

By Felix P. Bruner.

In a dispute over "fundamental policies" of the organization, Robert E. Clements, co-founder of the Townsend old-age pension movement, and Dr. Francis E. Townsend yesterday ended their association as pension advocates. Clements resigned as secretary and treasurer of Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., and announced he will return to his real estate business in California.

Generally considered the "brains" and actual working head of the organization, of which Townsend has been spokesman and "front," Clements has been given credit for the tremendous growth and financial success of the movement.

Clements said he did not believe the Townsend Plan should be used politically. At the same time he denied his resignation resulted from the recent announcement by Dr. Townsend that he would favor Senator William E. Borah for President.

From Los Angeles, the Associated Press quoted Townsend as saying that the resignation "meets with my most hearty approval." He also denied that the Borah statement brought about the resignation or that he had any intention of trying to "regiment" the Townsend organization for Borah's support.

"Fundamental Differences."

"Differences in what I consider fundamental policies of both organization and methods of gaining the enactment of the Townsend plan into law have arisen between Dr. Townsend and myself," Clements said in a statement. "Rather than take the slightest chance of endangering the solidarity of our ranks, after despairing of effecting complete harmony, I have determined to resign from all official connection with the movement, effective April 1, 1936.

"This does not mean that I shall cease to give my all to the advancement of the Townsend plan; it merely means that I am no longer operating in any official capacity."

Clements said he believed "as strongly as ever" in retirement at the age of 60, in the imposition of a 2 per cent transactions tax, the proceeds to be paid in amounts not in excess of $200 per month to the aged.

According to Clements, the organization now consists of 7,000 clubs "with millions of loyal members" and a cash reserve of more than $110,000, with no indebtedness.

Clements announced he was assigning all his interests in the Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., to the organization "without any consideration whatsoever."

Reported to be the most valuable property of the organization is the Townsend Weekly, published in Indiana, selling at 5 cents a copy, and reported to have a paid circulation approaching 250,000. The weekly has been owned jointly by Townsend and Clements.

To Withdraw Assets.

Clements said he was withdrawing a portion, amounting to less than one-third, of the assets of the publication. He said he was assigning all of his stock to Townsend, with the understanding that 90 per cent is to be given without charge to the national organization.

The resignation came two days before the opening of a Congressional investigation into the movement. Clements has been called as the first witness before the House investigating committee. He said he would be present.

"The investigation," he added, "will be a decided victory for the Townsend movement."

"I cannot be too emphatic," he concluded, "in my statement that I am for the Townsend plan, first, last and all the time, and with one centralized organization in control, as has been in the past and is, I believe, planned for the future.

Clements said he and Mrs. Clements, who has been his office mana-

U. S. Labor Act Declared Void A Second Time

Majority Rule, Unilateral Arbitration Are Voided in Illinois Ruling.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 24.—Federal Judge John P. Barnes today termed the national labor relations act unconstitutional and said he would grant an injunction against the National Labor Relations Board in favor of the Bendix Products Corporation, South Bend, Ind.

He instructed attorneys for the corporation, a subsidiary of the Bendix Aviation Corporation, to draw up a finding of fact on which his injunction would issue.

The corporation had asked the order to enjoin the board from holding an election among its employes. The election was to determine whether Local No. 1 of the International Automobile Workers or the Bendix Employes Association would represent the employes in collective bargaining.

"Heart of Act."

The judge's written opinion said:

"The combination of majority rule and compulsory unilateral arbitration is the heart of the act. Take these out and the act is gone. Consequently, it is concluded that the whole act is unconstitutional and void."

In another paragraph he said:

"If the act be so construed as to interfere with the control of the corporation's relations with its production employes, it is in violation of the tenth amendment as an invasion of control over purely local affairs."

The corporation's equity bill made L. W. Beaman, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, and three board members defendants.

Cited Commerce Clause.

They contended, the opinion said, that the act was applicable not only in interstate transportation and communication systems but also to

Curb on Crops Held 'Thievery' In Ford Attack

Leisure Devoted to Farming Lessens War Chances, Industrialist Says.

By the Associated Press.

Ways, Ga., March 24.—Crop curtailment was denounced by Henry Ford today as a violation of natural laws and the "security of plenty." He said it was "worse than thievery."

"If the farmers allow land to lie idle, they'll suffer," the automobile manufacturer said in disclosing a project there in his program for correlation of agriculture and industry.

In an interview at his 75,000-acre plantation, Cherry Hill, Ford said the use of leisure in agricultural pursuits, besides providing economic security, serves to keep people out of trouble and lessens the chances of war.

"The only way to end war is to make people fear it," he said, adding war in this country is controlled by 25 or 30 individuals.

He charged they are real "public enemies" and should be tracked down just as other public enemies.

The motor magnate said crop restriction was the brain child of the "underneath government," which he explained was a government composed of persons interested in their own profit, and one the people could not see.

"People are fatheads to let them get away with it," he said.

"Raise something, look to the land. The minute you make produce cheap, someone will find new uses for it."

Want More, He Says.

He said financiers are interested in crop control to keep prices up so they could make more money, adding:

"It's selfish and wrong. the Government shouldn't allow it."

The project in this rural Georgia community which Ford described as his own "new deal" will include an extensive system of work shops including a sawmill, electrical plant,

Scientist Asserts 'Overeating' Prolongs Life Span 7 Years

The "overeating" of four essential food materials can add seven years to the average span of human life, Dr. Henry C. Sherman, of Columbia University, predicted here last night.

The materials, the chemistry professor said, are calcium, protein, vitamin A, which promotes growth, and vitamin G, known as a preventer of pellagra.

Reporting on studies which he made as a research assistant of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, Dr. Sherman said he had succeeded in prolonging the life of rats to an amount equivalent to seven years of human life.

Dr. Sherman said that the addition of the four essentials above the levels needed for normal life and reproduction had "expedited growth and development, brought a higher level of adult vitality and extended the average span of adult life, or improved the life expectation of the adult.

Facts learned in his experimentation can readily be applied to humans since the chemistry of rat nutrition is closely like that of men in almost every respect.

At the start, Dr. Sherman found that a mixture of five-sixths whole wheat and one-sixth dried whole milk, to which salt and distilled water were added, was adequate for life and health.

But the addition of small amounts of the four essentials made for greater vitality and longer life.

"The increase in average length of adult life," said Dr. Sherman, "is equivalent to an extension of the long-standing adult life expectation of 70 years to 77 years instead."

Because improvements in the lengthening of the life span heretofore have largely been confined to lowering the death rates at early ages, leaving the average length of life unchanged, the lengthening of

G. O. P. Unity His Major Goal, Landon Asserts

'Party First' He Responds to Queries on Pledged Delegates.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., March 24.—Gov. Alf M. Landon pictured Republican harmony as transcending personal preferment in responding today to inquiries arising from the movement to nominate him for President.

Concerning the pledging of a slate of delegates to him in California, the Governor said he would "neither approve nor repudiate any delegate in any State" who chose to run as a Landon-for-President candidate.

"My chief concern in this crisis," he said, "is to see the Republican Party name its strongest possible candidate and a man who would make a good President. I have so tried to conduct myself that after the Cleveland convention the party will be in the most harmonious position so that we can present the strongest front."

Refreshed after a ten-day rest, the Governor said he probably would call a special session of the Legislature to enact measures to bring Kansas within the requirements of the Federal social security program.

May Precede Convention.

Gov. Landon indicated the special session might be summoned before the Republican national convention June 9, if it is decided a constitutional change is not necessary.

The Kansas constitution places entire authority and responsibility for relief to the needy and aged upon the counties. The Federal board has insisted upon State supervision.

"You and I and Roosevelt," a booklet by Charles P. Taft, was recommended by Gov. Landon.

The Taft booklet, written by a son of former President Taft, discusses the coming Presidential election, the two-party system, straw votes, currency and taxation, government and business, business regulation, governmental deficits, social security and foreign policies.

Campaign Planned.

Raleigh, N. C., March 24 (AP).—Republicans of North Carolina laid plans today for a 1936 campaign "to save America from the New Deal."

Gilliam Grissom, former collector of internal revenue here and a veteran party leader, was nominated for Governor over Irving B. Tucker, of Whiteville, 694½ to 393½.

Senator Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, the keynoter, attacked the record of the Democratic national administration and demanded that the Republican Party be restored to power so its plan, "the American plan," might be placed in effect.

Despite some opposition, the convention indorsed Federal Judge Isaac M. Meekins, of Elizabeth City, for the Presidency, with the action to bind only convention-elected national delegates.

Frank Patton, of Morganton, Burke County, was nominated for the United States Senate to oppose Senator Josiah W. Bailey, Democrat.

Chairman William C. Meekins, of Hendersonville, and Mrs. Eugene Hester, of Reidsville, vice chairman, were re-elected, as was Charles A. Jonas, of Lincolnton, national committeeman.

Dickinson Gives Talk.

Cleveland, March 24 (AP).—Senator Dickinson of Iowa, an avowed candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, said today the New Deal had abandoned common sense and thrift for a policy of "borrow, boom and bust."

Addressing a chamber of commerce luncheon, Dickinson said the Administration had failed to learn any lessons from the Supreme Court rulings against NRA and AAA, as demonstrated by President Roosevelt's proposed new tax program.

"Its approach to the problem is political rather than economic. It aims to force distribution of what the President calls "idle capital," but what it really does is to lay the greedy hands of the tax-gatherer upon reserves put by for a 'rainy day.' * * *

"It imposes serious hardships upon the small business man, who must finance expansion of plant or sales activities, not by borrowing, but out of his earnings. It thus restricts new enterprise and curtails employment, at the very time the President is calling upon industry to accept fresh responsibilities."

Schrom Urges 33 Firemen Be Added

Thirty-three additional men were asked for the Fire Department by Chief Charles E. Schrom yesterday. The additional personnel would be required, Chief Schrom said, to comply with the recent extension of annual leave of District employes. Congress recently amended the economy act to provide for 26 days' annual leave, cumulative up to 60 days.

The Fire Department head estimated the increased leave would boost personnel salary costs by something like $600,000 a year. An additional $70,000 would be required for uniforms and equipment for the new men, he estimated.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, is preparing an estimate for his department. This has not been completed.

Politics and People

By Franklyn Waltman

SOME six or seven years ago, prior to the depression, the Democrats in the Senate were gleefully badgering the tall, solemn Reed Smoot about the increasing costs of the Federal Government, then in the hands of the Republicans. Senator Smoot's reply became an axiom of politics and today, years after his retirement from public life, it is recalled by thoughtful men.

"The cost of government," said the Utah Mormon apostle, "has increased every year, and it will continue to increase. I care not what party is in power."

Reed Smoot's prophecy has stood the test of time. When he spoke the country was living in the new economic era and the Utah solon had no thought that Republican prosperity would end in the debacle of October, 1929. He was speaking, not of huge expenses necessitated by emergencies, but of the so-called ordinary expenses of the Federal Government.

Despite a renewal of agitation for governmental reorganization, elimination of overlapping functions and a reduction in agencies and bureaus, all the odds favor former Senator Smoot's prophecy remaining true. Emergency expenditures may be curtailed but bureaucracy, growing like Topsy, once intrenched cannot be rooted out—or if it can none has quite possessed sufficient genius to bring it about.

President Roosevelt in his letter on the subject to the presiding officers of House and Senate over the week-end did not speak of abandoning as quickly as it can be done all the emergency agencies established during the depression. On the contrary, he referred to what he regarded as the necessity for fitting some of these agencies into the permanent governmental establishment.

Thus year by year the numbers of Federal agencies and Federal employes increase as the Government reaches out its hand further to regulate the daily lives of its citizens or increases its paternalism over them. Studies to eliminate duplications, inefficiency and waste are not sufficient to invalidate Smoot's law of ever-increasing governmental cost.

If the present trend is to be changed, the country's conception of the function of government must undergo fundamental revision. Instead of looking toward the Federal Government to provide everyone a living, solve every problem and eradicate every evil, the people of the United States must assume some individual and community responsibility—and if they do not they should not complain about mounting governmental costs and subsequent rises in taxation.

* * *

This is not to say that the effort toward governmental economy launched on Capitol Hill by Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, and seconded by the President, is not constructive. It is indeed worth while, and if intelligently carried out will do much to slow down the rising cost of government. Moreover, it is a step toward assuring the country that it will receive some value for the taxes it pays.

Nor could there be a happier choice as chairman of a committee to recommend governmental economy than Senator Byrd. He achieved a Nation-wide reputation through his work in reorganizing the State government of Virginia when he was Governor of that Commonwealth.

Elected Governor because the Democratic machine of Virginia thought he was safe, Mr. Byrd gave that State one of the worst shocks it had received since reconstruction days when he started firing jobholders right and left; consolidating a multitude of sluggish and wasteful departments and bureaus into 12 efficient departments.

Changes in the State constitution were necessary but when the people of Virginia understood what he was doing this was no barrier. He revised the State tax system, managed to reduce tax rates and when he finished his term as Governor he presented to his successor a treasury with a surplus, although when he was inaugurated there had been a deficit.

Only the task of reorganizing the county governments of the State proved too much for Mr. Byrd. But this failure shrank into insignificance compared with his achievements. Given a free hand, Senator Byrd could do with the Federal Government as much as any other man—but the real task, and he has assisted in that, is to change the attitude of the country toward its Federal Government.

* * *

An illustration of the present trend in this country is found in a recent study of the relief situation made in the little town of Fulton, N. Y., by the New York Sun. Although relating directly to relief, the incident demonstrates the growing dependency of citizens on the Government.

Fulton, with a population of 12,000 in 1929 and approximately 13,000 now, in 1929 had 3,464 persons employed in its industries and 136 persons on relief—charitable cases, they were then termed—at a cost of $17,500 for the year, the New York Sun found. Fulton's industries now employ 4,327 persons but there are 858 persons on relief and the cost of relief for last year was $351,473, the Sun recounts.

Why? asked that newspaper and its reporter. Here was a town which it appeared had beaten the depression—its total employed was 25 per cent greater than in the boom year 1929, but at the same time its relief roll was 600 per cent greater and the cost of providing relief had increased 2,000 per cent. What was the answer?

After making many inquiries the best answer the Sun reporter received came from the case supervisor of the State TERA. She said, "I'm afraid that people have got to the point of considering relief as something natural." Not only have people become accustomed to the idea of relief, but they likewise have grown used to the idea of the Government doing things for them which they should do for themselves.

Knox Outlines Farm Program In N. Y. Speech

G. O. P. Aspirant Calls for Balanced Budget and Halt in 'Waste.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, tonight advocated an administration that would "stop wasteful spending, balance the budget and go back to simple principles of thrift and honesty."

These steps, with currency stabilization and scientific tariff reduction, were presented to the Economic Club of New York as part of a farm recovery program for the Republican Party which he hopes to head as Presidential candidate.

In the advance text of his address, which was broadcast, the publisher outlined both his personal principles and party policy.

He expressed eagerness to become the Republican standard bearer, but added "if some other man should be nominated I shall work just as hard for his election next November as I would for my own."

Gives His "Credo."

Listing his own principles and beliefs, Knox said:

"I believe our forefathers were wise in establishing the form of government which they established—a form of government which rests on the principle of home rule by the State and local authorities, coordinated by the Federal Government of certain clearly limited powers and functions. * * *

"I believe that as conditions change laws must change with them, and I believe that our fundamental law, the Constitution, provides ample means and freedom within which to accomplish this purpose."

The third principle stated was "the deep conviction that government under our American system must remain the servant of the people and not their master."

The Republican Party, Knox said, must keep its promises. He suggested it make these promises:

"1. To make no promise it does not intend and cannot reasonably hope to fulfill.

"2. To reduce the cost of government within the means of the people to pay out of current taxation.

"3. To take politics out of the Civil Service and endeavor to build up a permanent nonpartisan body of efficient public servants in each and every department in Washington.

"4. To recognize that American government is the servant of the people and not their master. * * *

"5. To recognize that intelligent national self-interest demands that we co-operate with other nations to stabilize currencies and remove as far as possible artificial barriers that now encumber the flow of goods and services between nations, without which there can be neither prosperity nor peace."

Three Farm Factors.

The farm problem he divided into three parts: Efficient production, finding domestic markets and finding foreign markets.

To promote more intelligent and economically efficient production Knox advocated that the Government supply information but "what the Government should not do is to attempt to tell the farmer what to plant, how much to plant, and in general to run their business for them."

He said the emergency currency measures taken in 1933 were effective in meeting the crisis which then existed, but do not look so wise now and that "no money mechanism can stand up under a fiscal policy of reckless spending beyond revenues derived from taxation."

The Government, he said, tends to seek more and more power until "all of liberty is lost."

Referring to conditions in Italy, Germany and Russia, Knox said "we too are on that narrow path" but that "the Supreme Court stopped us, and made us think."

Wintry Weather Balks Hunt for D. C. Flier

Salt Lake City, March 24 (AP).—Winter weather today thwarted the third attempt of a ground party searching for Howard Stark, of Washington, missing Department of Commerce flier, to scale a peak northeast of this city.

Lloyd L. Jeulson, air pilot, and two other men attempted to climb the mountain yesterday to investigate a plane-shaped mound of ice, but a biting wind and sliding snow forced them back.

The three spent the chilly night on the mountain and returned here today. Stark disappeared while flying from Rock Springs, Wyo., to Salt Lake City on January 16.

Jury Chosen to Hear $2,000,000 Balm Suit

New York, March 24 (AP).—A jury was chosen today to hear the $2,000,000 breach of promise suit brought against Frederic A. Gimbel, member of the department store family, by Lillian Mendel.

Miss Mendel, 41, charges that in 1930, and many times before that year, Gimbel promised to marry her after obtaining a divorce, but when Mrs. Lucille Guggenheim Gimbel divorced him in Paris in 1931 he refused to keep his promise.

Poll Strength For Roosevelt Now 54.1%

Drop of 5 Points Before Election Would Lead to His Defeat.

Presidential polls conducted by the Institute of Public Opinion and published in The Washington Post have shown that a drop of between 4 and 5 points in President Roosevelt's popularity between now and November would lead to his defeat.

The President polled 54.1 per cent of the vote of the two major parties in the last institute poll, reported on March 15, while the Republicans received 45.9 per cent.

It is interesting to note that President Roosevelt's popularity has twice fallen off by more than 5 points since February, 1934, when the institute first began taking its Presidential polls. It dropped from 69 per cent in February, 1934, to 64 per cent in April, 1934—a period of three months—and then lost 7 more points, falling to 57 per cent in June, 1934. By this time the "honeymoon" period of his administration had come to a close.

Lowest in September.

After a rise in popularity toward the end of 1934, Mr. Roosevelt's majority fell 6 points in the opening months of 1935 and sank to a low of 50.5 per cent last September. But it recovered quickly in October, climbing to 53 per cent. During the present year, however, there has been no major recession. But eight months remain between now and election and, as has been shown, his popularity once dropped 5 points in the short space of three months.

With his present majority of 54.1 per cent, Mr. Roosevelt is leading in 33 States with a total of 343 electoral votes. The number necessary to elect is 266. Four States—Michigan, Illinois, Kansas and Wyoming—are on the fence, voting half-Republican, half-Democratic. The remaining 11 States are Republican today.

Shift of 5 Points.

A shift of 5 points would throw the four doubtful States into the Republican column together with ten States which are now Democratic—Maryland, New York, Indiana, West Virginia, Nebraska, South Dakota, Minnesota and Idaho. In terms of electoral votes the results would be:

Republican, 291; Democratic, 240—or a Republican majority of 51.

Next Sunday's Nation-wide poll will show public sentiment on the issue of Civil Service as opposed to political patronage as a means of selecting personnel for Government service.

Woman, Hit by Auto, Tossed on Train Tracks

Chicago, March 24 (AP).—Seriously injured, Mrs. Silas Smolinski, 44, told a story of double cruelty today.

An automobile containing two men ran her down, she said. The two helped her in their car, saying they would take her to a hospital. The car gathered speed, and then as it crossed a maze of railroad tracks a mile away, the two hurled Mrs. Smolinski out.

U. S. S. Balch Launched; Destroyer Cost 5 Million

Quincy, Mass., March 24 (AP).—The U. S. S. Balch, last of a group of new Navy destroyers of new design, was launched at the Fore River plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation today.

Miss Gertrude Balch, of Wilmington, Del., granddaughter of Rear Admiral Beal Balch, in whose honor the ship was named, christened the vessel, which cost $5,000,000 to build.

The Balch belongs to the destroyer leader class, and is one of the largest destroyers built in this country. She is 372 feet long and of 1,850 displacement tons. Her armament will consist of torpedo tubes and 5-inch guns.

'Tough Tommy' Touhy Sentenced to 23 Years

Minneapolis, March 24 (AP).—Tommy Touhy, convicted mail robber, was sentenced to 23 years in Leavenworth today by Federal Judge Gunnar H. Nordbye.

Touhy, now an invalid, was known as "Terrible Tommy" during the heyday of the Touhy gang in Chicago. He was convicted last night on ten counts in participating in the $78,000 mail robbery here on January 3, 1933.

He was sentenced to five years each on three counts of robbing the mails and one year each on the other six mail robbery charges. A two-year term was decreed on the conspiracy count. The sentences are consecutive, not concurrent.

Didn't Believe in Signs.

Brooklyn, March 24 (AP).—W. Sidney Bergman, Brooklyn toy shop proprietor, was given a suspended sentence today when he pleaded guilty to violation of the penal code by removing the "made in Germany" mark from Christmas tree ornaments. Bergman explained he had removed the mark to sell them to Jewish patrons and was totally ignorant of the law.

Policemen Link Gambling Here To LaFontaine

6 Arrested, 900 Number Books Seized in Raid on Two Places.

Raiding two Washington establishments suspected of operating the "numbers" game, the police vice squad yesterday seized 900 numbers books addressed to the "Maryland Athletic Club, Bladensburg road and the District Line."

This is the address of the gambling house familiarly known as "Jimmy's place," opened more than a decade ago by James La Fontaine.

"Jimmy's" is in Prince Georges County, Md., just a few steps over the District of Columbia line.

Washington policemen have no jurisdiction where La Fontaine is concerned but, convinced that his establishment was a breeding place for crime that infested this city they set out, a year ago last December, to harass his place.

Picketed Casino.

Uniformed pickets were stationed on District territory near Jimmy's casino, and so much did they awe the customers that the place had to be shut down for lack of business.

The dice, blackjack and roulette games were halted, but police were convinced that "Jimmy's place" continued to be the headquarters of a big "numbers" syndicate, the business of which was centered almost entirely in Washington.

Yesterday's raids served to strengthen that suspicion.

The two places raided, police said, were run by one organization. One was located in the 1500 block of U street northwest, and was ostensibly a cigar store. It was here, according to the police, that the "runners"—or men who collected bets—and betters themselves brought their money.

Called Bookkeeping Place.

The other place raided, a house in the 2000 block of Fifteenth street, was where the bookkeeping was done, according to the police.

Six Negroes, five men and a woman, were arrested and charged with operating a lottery and conspiracy to operate a lottery.

They were Charles E. Pinkney, 35, and James T. Brooks, 18, of the 100 block of Adams street northwest; Elliot Ratley, 33, of the 1100 block of O street northwest; Louis G. Cooper, 21, of the 1900 block of Seventeenth street northwest; Leon L. Irving, 33, of the first block of P street northwest, and Elaine J. Harris, 21, of the 900 block of New Hampshire avenue northwest.

Police reported that they found 10,000 numbers slips in the two places, and they estimated that the lottery was taking in at least $1,000 a day.

Reported Reopened.

La Fontaine's place on Bladensburg road was reported recently to have reopened, but Prince Georges County police say that they have not been able to find any evidences of gambling there.

The residents of the county are widely divided on the question of Jimmy's Place. Some of the reformers say that Jimmy manages to keep open by the payment of graft and they have demanded that Gov. Harry Nice start an investigation.

Others say that it is impossible to prevent gambling in the county and they have suggested that it be legalized.

La Fontaine, a mysterious figure, has never been convicted of gambling. He has, however, served a jail sentence for violation of the income tax laws. At his trial, he admitted that part of his income came from gambling, but insisted that such income was not taxable.

Beale to Aid in Study Of D.C. Tax Delinquency

William S. Beale, vice president of the American Security & Trust Co., yesterday was appointed by the District Commissioners to be a member of the special committee named to study possible revision of the District laws dealing with delinquent taxes.

Other members of the committee are Chatham M. Towers, collector of taxes; Fred D. Allen, assessor; Vernon E. West, principal assistant corporation counsel; Harold E. Doyle, representing the District Real Estate Board; Thomas E. Lodge, Federation of Citizens Associations, and Rufus Lusk, representing the District Taxpayers Association.

6,000-Year-Old Road Discovered in Ecuador

New York, March 24 (AP).—The finding of an Inca road about six centuries old in Ecuador was reported by Carl Demuralt, second in command of an Andes-Amazon expedition, when he returned here today.

Jordan Takes Stand to Deny Killing Cashier

Two Alleged 'Confessions' Are Repudiated by Former Bus Boy.

Vigorously denying he fired the shot which brought death to Mrs. Lizzie Jaynes, cashier in the Garden T Shoppe, on Good Friday evening five years ago, Thomas Jordan, 30-year-old former convict and former bus boy, cook and handy restaurant man, took the stand in his own defense late yesterday afternoon.

In a nervous, jerky voice that rose and fell against the hush of the Criminal Court where he is on trial for his life in the slaying, Jordan denied that he had been the stocky gunman who fatally wounded the elderly cashier, or that he had had any part in the holdup at all.

Sometimes Jordan, white beneath prison palor and the strain of his trial, lapsed into philosophy that would have done credit to a modern Gallahad, and yesterday it was in the role of a modern Gallahad, he said in effect, that he had written District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, asking him if his former arrest in the murder shortly after it had occurred, would interfere with his contemplated marriage to blonde Jean Beierholm, Mount Vernon, N. Y., telephone employe and divorcee.

Under questioning by Defense Attorney Richard Bowman, Jordan told his story—a story in which he repudiated two of three confessions he has made in one of Washington's most mysterious murder mysteries.

The first confession he denied was the one he made in Washington to Detective Sergt. Robert Barrett and his associates a few months after the crime, when he had been picked up in Atlantic City and brought to headquarters here, to be confronted by Edith Dodsworth, a former Tea Shoppe waitress, who accused him of the crime.

"I knew they didn't have anything on me, and I was tired as I had been questioned so long," asserted Jordan.

"They promised me a square meal and a good bed, so I pleaded guilty to planning the robbery, and I was charged with conspiracy to commit robbery. Of course, the grand jury ignored the charge. I was surprised, I thought the charge would be murder.

Found Work in New York.

"But I got rest, and when I was freed, I went to New York and went to work."

Later, touching upon the second confession, which was allegedly made in Mount Vernon, N. Y., at the time of his arrest last May, Jordan said he "wanted to get the thing over with."

"So I confessed to about what I had in Washington years ago. But I wasn't in that robbery, and I figured I could plead manslaughter, and beat the case."

A third confession, signed by Jordan when he was returned to Washington after his arrest in Mount Vernon, the stocky former convict will deny or confirm today. Court adjourned yesterday afternoon just as Jordan was about to touch upon this.

Others Appear.

Other witnesses who appeared were Michael Crone, a former restaurateur, who hired Jordan as a bus boy and pamphlet distributor before the crime, and later discharged him when he found him throwing the bills away; Theodore Sloat, president of the Garden T Shoppe for 12 years; Sergt. Aubrey Tolson, of the Metropolitan Homicide Squad; Miss Sadie Frazier, manager of the dining room and kitchen of the T Shoppe, and Detective Sergt. Clyde M. Strange.

Several witnesses for the defense were introduced yesterday morning. They included persons associated with Jordan at Mount Vernon in his job as cook at a restaurant. They stated in general that his character was, as far as they knew, excellent.

During his testimony, Tolson told the jury that Jordan admitted the shooting.

By the Associated Press.

Greenock, Scotland, March 24.—Great Britain's super-liner, the Queen Mary, lay at anchor in the sea tonight off Gourock after her first voyage—a ticklish passage down the Clyde River on the bed of which the ship twice was stranded.

Authorities estimated a million persons thronged the Clyde banks to watch and cheer the great vessel of 80,773 gross tons as she slowly traveled the 15 miles of tortuous river to the sea. She is Britain's hope to take the North Atlantic's blue ribbon for speed from the French liner, Normandie.

The giant was within a few hundred yards from the Glasgow shipyard, where she was built, when the wind caught the great bulk and sent it straddling obliquely across the river. She was freed in 20 minutes by the tugs towing her, but five minutes later was again grounded, this time for eight minutes.

It took more than two hours for the trip, but authorities said the damage, if any, was negligible.

After the ship was anchored at sea, an oil tanker began pumping 2,000 tons of oil into the liner for her voyage to Southampton tomorrow night to begin her trial runs.

While the huge turbines are tested and the liner's speed established on the trials, the final fitting-out of the Queen Mary will proceed. The ship, equipped to carry 2,200 passengers across the Atlantic in four days, will make her maiden voyage to New York in May.

Concert Canceled.

The Earlham Club of Washington announced yesterday that the concert of the Earlham College choir, scheduled here for next Tuesday, has been canceled because of a change in the itinerary of the choir.

Bricks Hurled in Riot In N. Y. Radio Strike

New York, March 24 (AP).—Blackjacks and bricks served as weapons today when 200 striking radio workers and nonstriking employes clashed in a Greenwich Village street. A single shot also was fired in the 15-minute encounter.

Pickets at the plant of the De Jure Amsco Radio Corporation, where 400 men and women are on strike, charged the nonstrikers as they neared the plant under guard.

Police, who broke up the fight, sent one participant to a hospital.

Colorado Judge Urges Sterilization of Felons

He was instructing a jury to find Larry J. O'Fallon, charged with a statutory offense, insane.

"In cases of this kind, the law should permit a court to order sterilization," Judge Henley said.

He added that he would sponsor a mandatory sterilization law in the Colorado Legislature.

Hauptmann's Clemency Plea Goes Unfiled

Convicted Killer Has Less Than Week to Live; May Make New Effort.

By the United Press.

Trenton, N. J., March 24.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's life was measured down to one week tonight unless Gov. Harold G. Hoffman issues another reprieve.

The New Jersey Court of Pardons met and adjourned today without receiving a petition for clemency from C. Lloyd Fisher, Hauptmann's lawyer. It will meet again Saturday. At that time Fisher is expected to file a plea, contending there is new evidence of sufficient weight and authenticity to justify commutation of the death sentence.

Plea Once Rejected.

That same plea already has been made to the court, of which Gov. Hoffman is the presiding officer. It was rejected, 7 to 0. Hoffman did not vote.

Hoffman's decision on whether to grant another reprieve probably will not be made until he has a talk with Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon. When that will be, Hoffman doesn't know. He said he wanted to confer with Attorney General David T. Wilentz first, but today he made no attempt to get in touch with the attorney general.

Condon, who handed the $50,000 ransom across a cemetery hedge, has laid down stern conditions for his meeting with Hoffman. It must occur in his New York home; questions and answers must be in writing, and Wilentz must be present. Jafsie and his family are irritated at all the blasts Hoffman has loosed at them and they are cautiously protecting their interests.

The meeting between Condon and Hoffman may not occur before Thursday. Wilentz is going to Washington tomorrow on business other than the Hauptmann case, and will have no chance to confer with the Governor before Thursday.

It is going to be a double death in State Prison next Tuesday night unless Hauptmann is reprieved. The pardons court today rejected the plea of Charles Zied, last of the Tri-State gang, for clemency. He will die for the murder of a Camden detective.

54 of Crew Strike, Delay Dollar Liner

Genoa, Italy, March 24 (U.P.).—Fifty-four members of the crew of the around-the-world Dollar liner President Garfield struck today, delaying sailing of the vessel for six hours.

Culling summoned black-shirted Fascist port militiamen and dock police, who halted the strikers at the dockside until the American consul arrived to arbitrate.

The crewmen returned to the ship after the two discharged seamen agreed to remain ashore for transport to the United States aboard the next vessel.

Death Is Declared Suicide; Body Is Discovered by Landlady.

Clad in a black velvet dressing gown, Mrs. Edith Boucher, 38, was found dead yesterday on the floor in her gas-filled apartment at 1910 Kalorama road northwest. A corsage of faded gardenias was found in the kitchen near the stove.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, after performing an autopsy, stated he would issue a suicide certificate.

Mrs. Boucher was found when the odor of gas was traced to her apartment. William Lane, 29, elevator operator told police he went to the apartment with a special delivery letter and when he smelled the gas he notified the landlady, Mrs. Sidney Hayes. Mrs. Hayes opened the door with a pass key.

Lane said he had taken the woman to her apartment about 8 p. m. Monday. He said he had smelled the gas earlier in the day but had paid no attention to it.

When they entered the apartment, Mrs. Hayes said, four burners on the gas stove in the kitchen were open. All of the windows were closed. No notes were found.

The bouquet of faded flowers was on the floor of the kitchen. Mrs. Boucher's body was in a reception hall. Police said she apparently was lying on a divan and, after being affected by the gas, got up, reeled into the hall and toppled over.

Mrs. Boucher was the wife of Milton J. Boucher, a contractor, who lives with his brother, Frank X. Boucher, at 1324 Columbia road northwest. Mrs. Boucher's two sisters, who live out of town, have been notified, and will reach Washington today.

2 Mexican Police Free In Death of American

Mexico City, March 24 (AP).—Unable to decide which of two accused police officers was guilty of killing Francis Ahearn, 19-year-old Boston University student, here November 19, 1934, a court released both prisoners today.

Both officers denied shooting Ahearn in the back after the American was in a fight with a hotel owner so, "in order to avoid convicting an innocent man," the court absolved both.

Bean Taken From Lung.

Ohio Inundates New Area; Peak Past Cincinnati

By the Associated Press.

The Ohio River inundated low-lying areas of a dozen towns and villages in southwestern Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana last night as its flood crest passed Cincinnati, leaving 20,000 homeless.

The river, however, was reported to be losing some of its fury and rivermen along the lower valley said damage there would be of no major importance.

High waters in other sections were receding as flood-torn communities sought to repair $500,000,000 damage in Eastern States. Revised death lists showed 178 dead. More than 400,000 were homeless.

Flood and storm deaths by States: Maine, 5; New Hampshire, 1; Vermont, 6; Massachusetts, 10; Connecticut, 4; New York, 2; Pennsylvania, 111; West Virginia, 14; Maryland, 4; Virginia, 4; North Carolina, 2; Georgia, 2; Tennessee, 1; Ohio, 5; Missouri, 4; Wisconsin, 3.

20,000 Homeless in Cincinnati.

Flood situation by States:

Ohio—20,000 homeless in Cincinnati as flood crest passed, inundating dozens of small communities; 20 square blocks in Cincinnati under water, but business section unaffected; Red Cross appealed for shoes and clothing for homeless; damage in Ohio Valley estimated at $200,000,000; at Portsmouth, where 60,000 persons were secure behind a 6-foot flood wall the river was stationary at 59.36 feet; water falling east of Portsmouth.

Kentucky—Louisville expects 32 to 34 feet of water, 4 feet above the flood stage, about Saturday; most Kentucky cities along the river escaped serious damage as their business districts, for the most part, stood well above the level of the water.

Indiana—Scores of families left their lowland homes along the Ohio; inundation of 75 per cent of Union Township in Vanderburgh County expected; flood caused cessation of ferry service at most points between Indiana and Kentucky and a number of State roads were blocked by water.

Pennsylvania—Many large industries resumed operations in Pittsburgh as power was restored; "Golden Triangle," Pittsburgh's business district, still closed to general traffic as reclamation work pushed; a survey at Johnstown showed damage was upward of $28,820,000; around Scranton, workmen started draining flood-filled anthracite mines; 7,000 miners expected to be idle another three weeks; Gov. Earle contemplated special session of the Legislature to provide rehabilitation funds for the State.

West Virginia—Heavy rains sent Tygarts Valley River out of banks, flooding the lowlands in the area around Elkins. Two streets were inundated, and at Wheeling it was estimated another week would be required to make Wheeling Island, in the middle of the Ohio River, safe for reoccupancy by its 10,000 residents. Ohio Valley business men met at Huntington to draft plans for $237,000,000 flood control program.

Connecticut—At Hartford, insurance center and hardest hit New England city, demobilization soon of the 1,000 National Guardsmen on duty was announced and the city relaxed somewhat its 9 p. m. curfew as thousands of WPA workers worked to repair $25,000,000 damage. About 2,120 refugees still are receiving Red Cross assistance; the State received a Federal allotment of $3,000,000 for rehabilitation work; rivers continued to recede.

Renews Bond Issue Plan.

Massachusetts—Gov. Curley resubmitted to the Legislature a proposal for an $8,000,000 relief bond issue, which was rejected last week before the floods. He also announced a State-wide tag day would be held Saturday to raise funds for flood victims. An appeal was sent to Washington to double the State's quota of 125,000 WPA workers. Damage in Massachusetts is estimated at $200,000,000.

Vermont—Two-year-old Beverly Hathaway, missing since Monday, reported drowned in receding waters of White River at Chelsea, bringing the State's total flood deaths to six.

Maine—The Saco River, last in New England to continue flooded, burst through a dam above the village of Hollis; several houses in the village crumbled before its force and the village was isolated; 10,000 in the State were still homeless and damage was estimated at $25,000,000; the State asked for $10,000,000 in Federal funds.

New Hampshire—Democratic State committee announced it had been advised a Federal engineer would be sent to New Hampshire to take charge of flood reconstruction; large supplies of typhoid vaccine distributed by State health department; Senator Keyes asked Congress to appropriate $1,300,000 for flood control work in the State.

New York—Oswego River still rising near Syracuse, flooding buildings at Fulton; official estimate of damages in State $6,175,000; State health department said water supply in all affected areas "is under good control"; WPA announced allocation of $246,500 to five up-State counties for reconstruction work.

Post's Flood Fund Nears $1,000

Hampshire, $5,327; New Jersey, $28,769; North Carolina, $14,213; Rhode Island, $1,711; South Carolina, $4,812; Tennessee, $10,148; Vermont, $750; Virginia, $7,194, and West Virginia, $14,167.

Washington's original quota of $25,000 was exceeded when donations sent direct to the Red Cross by local individuals and organizations reached the $32,000 mark.

Typical letters received by the Red Cross was the note of Hilda Weiner, 10 years old, Baltimore. She told how she emptied her penny bank "to help those poor people in the flood sections."

Cumberland, Md., residents, driven from their homes only a few days ago by raging waters, already have donated $5,239.06. Officials told the Associated Press the drive there would net $7,000 in a day or two.

A dance for benefit of flood victims will be given next Wednesday by AAA Lodge, No. 116, American Federation of Government Employes.

3 States Urge Potomac Spans Reconstruction

Virginia, Maryland and W. Virginia Seek Relief as U. S. Surveys Floods.

While brackish, disease-ridden flood waters continued to retreat from devastated cities and towns in more than a dozen Eastern and New England States, Governors, Cabinet officers and members of the House and Senate gathered here seeking methods to prevent a recurrence of a similar disaster.

Developments in the Capital yesterday were:

1. Secretary Wallace and Morris L. Cooke, rural electrification administrator, in separate statements declared that "proper" soil conservation measures ould have prevented the Eastern flood.

2. The Red Cross announced that $1,474,000 had been contributed to its $3,000,000 relief fund, but reported that the disaster had been worse than was at first thought. Instead of 40,000 families, the organization said a total of 82,000 were in need of rehabilitation.

3. Secretary Ickes ordered public works directors in 20 States to survey flood damage to PWA projects and other public property, and report to him as quickly as possible.

4. Hearings began on a bill introduced by Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, calling for the organization of a Mississippi Valley Authority, to operate in some respects like the Tennessee Valley Authority. Representative Walter (Democrat), Pennsylvania, introduced a similar measure for the Delaware River area.

5. Governors of Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia announced a conference to be held here today to map a reconstruction program for flood-stricken areas, particularly the rebuilding of interstate bridges over the Potomac.

Meanwhile, the New England Congressional delegation, together with a group of State legislators from Boston, conferred here yesterday with Gov. Brann of Maine. Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and War Department officials. Copeland's committee has charge of a pending $300,000,000 flood control bill, which the Bay State delegation hopes to amend to provide flood control for the riotous Merrimac and Connecticut rivers.

Copeland agreed to postpone reporting the bill to the Senate until Congress has received reports from Army engineers on the feasibility of once-rejected flood control projects in those States.

Freezing temperatures damaged fruit in southern New Mexico.

The mercury dropped to a low of 17 degrees above zero in parts of the Oklahoma Panhandle as the skies cleared of dust. Harry F. Wahlgren, Federal weather observer, said a killing frost might visit the north and central sections of the State.

Chilly breezes, blown off snowstorms in the West, routed spring-like temperatures from eastern Kansas and western Missouri. At Goodland, Kans., the temperature reached a maximum low of 14 degrees above zero. There were cool rains in south-central Missouri, where a tornado killed four persons and left 40 families homeless yesterday.

Unusually cold weather, accompanied by snow, visited Washington State, dropping temperatures below freezing. On the western side of the Cascade Mountains an inch and a half of snow fell.

Talmadge Feud With President Splits Georgia

Democrats May Carry the Contest to Convention; G. O. P. 'Undecided.'

[Editors note: This is the tenth of a series of Associated Press dispatches presenting an objective view of the State political situations as they fit into the national political scene.]

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, March 24, Georgia Democrats are embroiled over ramifications of a bitter feud involving Gov. Eugene Talmadge, red-suspendered native son, and a Georgian by adoption, President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Many political observers predict the fight will reach the floor of the national convention in Philadelphia June 23.

Republicans, declaring themselves for the most part undecided on a Presidential candidate, have called a State convention at Atlanta May 9 to select delegates to the Republican National Convention June 9 at Cleveland.

G. O. P. committeemen, headed by Josiah Rose, Atlanta lawyer who was collector of internal revenue for Georgia under the Hoover Administration, have declined to speculate on the relative strength of Republican candidates now in the field.

Leaders of the Democratic factions meanwhile are maneuvering to gain advantage in early tests at the polls—matching Talmage against Roosevelt in county Presidential preferential primaries.

A major issue has been the financial dictatorship which the Governor set up at the capitol February 24 with the aid of National Guardsmen.

Talmadge charged that "New Dealers," seeking to wreck his economy program, had brought on the situation by engineering the 1935 Legislature into adjournment without the enactment of an appropriations act for 1936-37.

He declared against an extra session, suspended two elective finance officers who declined to pay out 1936 funds without specific legislative authorization, and set out to run the State's $20,000,000-a-year business by executive decree.

Troops armed with pistols and machine guns guarded his $10,000,000 "war chest" at the treasury as litigation over the coup made its way through the courts.

Roosevelt, who owns a timbered farm near Warm Springs, won the first two elections. The rural counties of Seminole and Harris—the latter of which includes the Roosevelt-sponsored Pine Mountain resettlement project—indorsed the President for renomination by top-heavy majorities.

"Straw votes," responded the Talmadge staff, and asked why Roosevelt forces called off an election in Wilcox County, near the Governor's McRae home.

The Senate yesterday passed the $205,000,000 agriculture appropriation bill carrying $1,000,000 for continuing the big Midwest "shelterbelt" and sent it to conference with the House.

The Senate added approximately $39,000,000 to the bill over the amount voted by the House. The increases were largely made up by appropriation of $10,000,000 for the Forest Service to acquire new timber lands, and a like amount for the Soil Erosion Service to study methods of flood and erosion control and to develop nursery stock for water sheds.

An amendment by Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, was accepted, adding $7,728,000 to the allowance for eradicating bangs disease among cattle.

The Senate also voted authority to the Weather Bureau to send its experts to school to study improved aid to aviation safety.

Labor Act Ruled Void

other industries engaged predominantly in interstate commerce.

This Judge Barnes called "a familiar but fallacious argument," which would "amend the commerce clause" of the Constitution and broaden the definition of "commerce" to include "most of the activities of modern life."

He quoted the Supreme Court's NRA decision in declaring that nothing in the present case directly affected interstate commerce.

"Even if it be assumed that 'a question has arisen concerning the representation of the plaintiff's employes,' such question has not arisen in interstate commerce," Judge Barnes said.

Holds Process Intrastate.

"It has arisen in a manufacturing process carried on wholly within the State of Indiana."

The judge also said that "if there is judicial review provided for by the statute, it is wanting in due process."

An election among the corporation's employes "cannot fail to consume the time and attention of the workers, decrease production and cause the plaintiff damage.

"At the worst, it can cause all the foregoing and ill-will, strife, civil commotion, riots and even bodily harm to representatives of rival factions."

The Bendix attorneys were told to present an order, for the judge's signature, on March 31.

The Bendix plant at South Bend was described in the opinion as engaged in the manufacture of carburetors, brakes and other automobile and airplane parts.

Its 3,540 "production employes" include some members of craft unions, said the opinion, and some nonunion men. The International Union United Automobile Workers of America is an A. F. of L. union.

The national labor relations act was approved on July 5, 1935. It creates the National Labor Relations Board, declared the right of employes to organize for collective bargaining, and empowers the board to issue orders compelling any person to cease certain defined "unfair labor practices."

Second Similar Ruling.

The decision of Judge John P. Barnes, in Chicago, holding the national labor relations act unconstitutional followed a similar ruling in Kansas City last December. In the Kansas City case Judge Merrill E. Otis held that Congress had exceeded its authority to regulate commerce among the States, and that the whole act was unconstitutional.

Manufacturers' Taxes Spurned In Revenue Bill

House Group Decides on Modified Processing Levies.

By Robert C. Albright.

Turning thumbs down on a last-minute proposal for general manufacturers excise taxes, the Ways and Means tax sub-committee yesterday decided to include modified processing levies in a tentative tax report carrying potential revenues estimated at $986,000,000 the first year.

Sub-committee members made clear that the processing tax schedule was incorporated only "as a basis for hearings" to be conducted next week by the full Ways and Means Committee. There is strong sentiment for leaving them out of the final draft, if sufficient revenue can be found without them.

The McCormack manufacturers excise tax bill was proposed at yesterday's session by a Republican member of the sub-committee but was promptly voted down by the Democrats. Exempting food, clothing and necessities of life, it was estimated to yield an additional $500,000,000.

Corporate Tax Proposals.

Meanwhile it became known that the revised Vinson undistributed corporate earnings tax schedules voted last week by the sub-committee, and estimated to yield $591,000,000 annually in revenue, would impose taxes ranging from 4 to 42 per cent on companies earning more than $10,000, dependent on the amount withheld from dividends. The highest effective tax under the former "cushion" schedule was 47½ per cent.

Corporations earning less than $10,000 would be in a favored tax classification ranging from 1 to 29½ per cent. Even if such companies withheld as much as 40 per cent of earnings for reserve purposes, their tax would be only 13 per cent, less than the existing rate. If 50 per cent of earnings were retained, however, the tax would rise to 18¾ per cent, slightly higher than the present rate. If only 30 per cent of earnings were retained (which is the average retention over a 15-year period), a tax of only 7½ per cent would be imposed on statutory income.

The new "cushion" device worked out by the sub-committee provides a formula imposing steadily steeper taxes after the $10,000 earnings mark is reached, but after earnings reach $20,000 a constant rate of 15 per cent is applied on income of all corporations withholding only 30 per cent of earnings. If more than that amount is retained, the rates become severely steeper.

Get Preferred Status.

Thus all corporations earning less than $20,000 actually are given a preferred status. The sub-committee was told that out of the 257,000 corporations which pay taxes, 214,000 earn less than $10,000 and 6,958 earn between $10,000 and $20,000. Members argue therefore that 86 per cent of all corporatons, mostly in the small earnings class, receive preferred treatment under the plan.

The processing tax rates on which the sub-committee yesterday took tentative action were those proposed by Farm Administrator Chester Davis, imposing lowered levies on farm commodities, but broadening the list of commodities to 33. In announcing the action yesterday, Chairman Samuel B. Hill said the sub-committee reported this same list, except that starches were eliminated.

At the same time, Chairman Hill disclosed, the sub-committee voted to refund $35,000 in processing taxes on floor stocks which were on hand January 6, when the AAA was terminated.

The original AAA act carried provision for a processing tax on floor stocks. It also provided that the act might be terminated by the Secretary of Agriculture at any time he felt the necessity for issuing the proclamation. Under such a proclamation, the act would be repealed in 30 days. Floor stocks which were on hand when the proclamation was issued would be subject under the act to a refund. Hill explained that the sub-committee decided to accord the same treatment in principle to floor stocks on hand when AAA was invalidated, even though it entailed a revenue loss of $35,000.

Rough estimates of revenue yield from the various items incorporated in the committee's report calculated that $764,000,000 would be raised the first year if the $35,000,000 was deducted for refunds, and if processing taxes were omitted. Processing taxes would increase the yield to approximately $986,000,000.

Tentative figures on which these estimates of yield were based were:

From the new graduated tax on undistributed corporate dividends, and from the new income tax on dividends, $591,000,000.

invited to attend the session at a time to be set later.

Chairman Norton of the House District Committee also plans to ask for a hearing before the Senate sub-committee. She will ask that the lump sum be returned to $5,700,000 and that health and public welfare items be restored to budget figures or higher.

The sub-committee postponed discussion of the elimination of funds for character education by the House, because of the absence of Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, sponsor of the educational experiment. A special meeting will be held on this matter.

Department executives heard yesterday from the following:

Department of Vehicles and Traffic, recorder of deeds, Public Library, Highway Department, Sewer Department, refuse division, Electrical Department, schools, Police, Health Department and courts.

The only major department yet to be heard is the Public Welfare, which will be the first called this morning.

Chain Stores Bill Is Voted By House Unit

Right-of-Way Is Sought on Plan to Bar Price Discrimination.

Action this session by House and Senate on legislation designed to prevent price discrimination in chain store and other quantity buying appeared imminent yesterday, when the House Judiciary Committee reported the revised Patman chain store bill, and laid plans to seek right-of-way for the measure.

Aimed at a similar objective, a bill sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson is now on the Senate calendar, and scheduled for consideration. Hearings on another measure, sponsored jointly by Senators Van Nuys, (Democrat), of Indiana, and Borah, (Republican), Idaho, are in progress before a Senate Judiciary Committee.

The bill reported yesterday by the House Judiciary Committee makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grades and quality where such discrimination tends to lessen competition and create a monopoly.

Differences Develop.

The reported measure represented a merger of portions of bills introduced by Representative Wright Patman, (Democrat), of Texas, and Hubert Utterback, (Democrat), Iowa.

Sharp differences on whether chain stores tend to bring about a monopoly developed, meanwhile, between Senator Borah and Dr. Malcolm McNair, a Harvard business school professor, at yesterday's Senate Judiciary sub-committee hearings.

Borah contended the object of his bill "is to protect the independent merchant so he may have the same rebate as is granted the larger purchaser."

Dr. McNair, granting the bill's objective, still said he saw no danger of the chain store obtaining a monopoly by crowding out the independent merchant.

Distinction Is Urged.

McNair added:

"We should distinguish between the big business which reduces consumer power by monopolistic prices and those big businesses which increase consumer power by reducing costs of distribution."

It was McNair's contention that chain stores have reduced distribution costs by combining the functions of the wholesaler and the retailer.

Representative John E. Miller (Democrat), of Arkansas, chairman of the House Judiciary sub-committee, which conducted hearings on the Patman-Utterback bills, said the revised House measure permits certain differentials between wholesalers and retailers; prevents quantity discount except for actual difference in manufacture, sale and delivery; abolishes the basing point principles of sales, and requires f. o. b. prices. The burden of proof is shifted to the manufacturer to show justification when charged with discrimination.

Reich Resents Allies Demands In Rhine Crisis

Hitler Holds Out Olive Branch; Tells Europe Germany Stands Pat.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 24.—Adolf Hitler oratorically and diplomatically rejected the Locarno program of four former World War allies tonight and told Europe he is standing pat following the military reoccupation of the demilitarized Rhineland. At the same time he extended an olive branch of peace by holding out hope for proposals.

Europe's statesmen will have to surrender their postwar assumptions that "German weakness can be relied upon as a constant factor in international relations," he told a cheering audience of 20,000 at the huge Deutschlande Halle.

Calls Proposals Unendurable.

At the same time the official news agency published the German reply rejecting vital features of the Locarno Powers' proposals as "based on new discrimination, unendurable for a great nation, and upon a renewed attempt to establish the inequality of Germany."

"Every attempt to introduce a reorganization of Europe with the old methods of the hate-filled division of nations into the more privileged and the less privileged, the defamed and the honorable, or into those dictating and those subjected to dictation," must—because it is undertaken under the same old destructive assumptions—lead to the same result: That is, the new solution will be no better than the old," said the German answer.

And in practically the same words Der Fuehrer said it from the platform.

Holds Out Fresh Hope.

The text of the formal answer, however, held out hope for further negotiations by promising that "positive proposals" along with a "comprehensive statement" of Germany's position would be submitted to the British government next Tuesday.

This will be after Sunday's Reichstag election, in the interest of which Hitler spoke tonight, one of the series of a dozen campaign addresses he is making.

'Good Whipping' Threat Breaks School Strike

The pupils "walked out" yesterday when they learned Arwood M. Miller was not returning as superintendent of schools. Although Miller had informed the school board he did not wish to be considered for re-election, a group of 30 pupils went on strike Monday. During the day others joined their ranks.

Party Leaves to Seek Revival Of Organisms Frozen for Ages

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 24.—A scientific expedition prepared today to leave for a Siberian "region of eternal frost" to attempt to recover and revive organisms believed to have been in a state of suspended life for tens of thousands of years.

The decision to send an expedition representing the Russian academy of sciences followed successful experiments by a group of scientists headed by the academician, Peter Kepterеff, on minute organisms thought to have been in a retarded state for 1,000 to 3,000 years.

The organisms were dug up from a depth of 3 to 4 meters (about 10 to 13 feet) in a region sweeping from the Arctic southward through central Siberia, where the ground below 9 feet never thaws.

Kapterеff said a block of frozen ground was placed in a glass vessel into which distilled water was poured. Soon the ground began to thaw, disclosing mollusk eggs and seminal filaments of mushrooms, moss and seaweed. All these organisms were revived, the plant filaments began to grow and the eggs hatched out mollusks, which bred.

Kapterеff said he now has more than ten generations of these mollusks, numbering several hundreds. The new expedition intends to go deeper into the frozen ground in the hope of uncovering organisms of the "fourth age," or remote past. Kapterеff said the search would be made on the Arctic Coast in the region of Lyakhov Island.

Clements Quits Pension Job

ger and secretary, will take a short vacation before going to California.

While Dr. Townsend is generally credited with being the originator of the plan, which has shaken the political organizations of the West and Middle West, Clements is credited with having been mostly responsible for whatever success the movement has achieved.

Was Townsend's Employer.

Three years ago Dr. Townsend was a salesman in the employ of Clements, who was operating a prosperous real estate business. Townsend went to Clements with the idea of the old-age revolving fund. After considerable discussion, Clements became vitally interested.

The real estate operator, who is 41, set out to make the movement move. Townsend made the speeches. Clements organized the clubs and collected the dues. Neither had any experience in applied economics. Townsend had been, before becoming a real estate salesman, a practicing physician and a health officer.

Clements and Townsend each were receiving $50 a week salary. Recently they increased their pay to $150 a week. Both also received expenses, but a report made at the Townsend convention last fall indicated that the expense money total was small. In the same report receipts from dues, donations and the sale of official literature and paraphernalia were given as $636,803. Expenditures were given as $585,446.

The Townsend headquarters occupies modest offices in the Southern Building. There is no name on the door and the office partitions are of wallboard. Only a few employes are in evidence.

Shortly after his resignation Clements was served with a subpoena ordering him to appear Thursday before the House committee. He was ordered to produce all records, documents, files and other data incident to the operation of the organization.

Chairman Bell (Democrat), Missouri, of the committee, said that Clements had been informed Monday night he would be the first witness and would be expected to explain the organization, tell how much money had been collected and where the money went.

The committee has employed James R. Sullivan, Kansas City lawyer, as counsel. For weeks committee investigators have been gathering material. At Townsend headquarters it was said special counsel had not been employed and that no particular preparations had been made for the hearing. The committee has $50,000 to finance the investigation.

Besides Bell, the members are Representatives Tolan (Democrat), California; Collins (Republican), California; Lucas (Democrat), Illinois; Gavagan (Democrat), New York; Hollister (Republican), Ohio; Ditter (Republican), Pennsylvania, and Hoffman (Republican), Michigan.

Bell "Not Surprised."

Bell said he was not surprised by the Clements resignation and that he expected other resignations to follow.

He said the "devastating suspense created by the investigation delay and the constant strivings of leaders to gain control of the organization, together with the sparring of the various members of the extensive legal staff in the organization's employ for this hearing, made this first and hasty climax possible.

"In the last few weeks the feelings of the leaders have been more and more tense because the investigators did their work quietly and did not announce any policies or what evidence had been found."

Representative McGroarty (Democrat), author of a Townsend bill, said the resignation would make no difference in plans to elect Townsend Congressmen this fall.

"It was just a case of two key men not being able to agree," he said. "Dr. Townsend wanted a third party movement, but Clements opposed it. I regret Clements' resignation because he built up the movement."

McGroarty said he was seeking a House petition to force consideration of the bill. He said 100 members were ready to sign. Signatures of 218 are needed to force consideration.

Hitler Rejects Allies' Terms

lined in the white paper issued last week on the Rhineland crisis.

The disclosure was made in reply to a direct question from the Marquess of Lothian, who asked: "Have we, or have we not entered into what Flandin and Van Zeeland (diplomatic representatives of France and Belgium) regard as a military alliance?"

The Marquess said Germany is now "immeasurably weaker than before the war" and asked why Britain should add weight to her support against Germany by a military alliance on the side of Russia, Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, France and Italy.

Behind the scenes the Council has been bombarded for the past 24 hours with demands by French and Little Entente delegates to bring the London deliberations to a quick end so as not to risk being placed in the position of having been turned down by Hitler.

For this reason, informed sources said, the Council dramatically and pointedly shut up shop a few minutes before Von Ribbentrop arrived.

The Council decision was interpreted not only as a rebuff to the Reich, but also to Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, who had worked hard to keep conciliation machinery in operation pending receipt of Hitler's reply to a Locarno program mapped by Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

Eden angered the French by his declaration in the House of Commons yesterday that the four-power plan constituted "proposals" to Germany and not an ultimatum. The French declared they are seeking only a "yes or no" answer from Berlin and would not discuss any counter-proposals. France is believed to have sought the adjournment today.

The Council's adjournment—with no indication as to when it might reconvene—also left the Italo-Ethiopian crisis unsettled, although Salvador De Madariaga of Spain is empowered to confer with the belligerents and learn their peace terms.

Ethiopia is understood to have informed the Council that Emperor Haile Selassie is sticking to his demand that peace can be made only within the framework of the League and on the condition that all of Italy's expeditionary forces withdraw from his country.

Writers Appeal To House Unit On Movie Sales

Protest Hollywood Practice of Changing Titles; Duffy Bill Assailed.

By the United Press.

A group of prominent writers called on the House Patents Committee yesterday to protect them from the old Hollywood custom of buying a novel called "Mississippi" and producing it for the screen under the title "Heaven on Earth."

That is what the movie magnates did to a novel by Ben Lucien Burman.

"They called it 'Heaven on Earth,'" he explained bitterly, "because the leading actor took the beautiful lady in his arms and exclaimed: 'I found Heaven in your arms.'"

Burman also wrote "Steamboat 'Round the Bend,' and the movie directors wanted to change that to "Steamboat Bill.' Burman got his friend, the late Will Rogers, to go to bat for him and the picture came out under the original title.

Another author who successfully resisted title changing was Mary Heaton Vorse, who told how her publisher had wanted to change her "Footnote to History" to "Footnote to Folly."

Opposed Duffy Bill.

Burman and the other writers apepared before the committee in opposition to the Duffy bill to revise the copyright laws.

Thyra Samter Winslow complained that the Duffy bill gives writers even less protection than the present copyright law, and makes greater concessions to English authors who might come here to write of America than it does our own writers.

But when it came to rewrite trouble no one could match the experience of Mrs. Mateen L. Farnham, daughter of Ed. Howe, "Sage of Potato Hill."

"I wrote for 20 years before I sold one story to the movies," she said. "I wanted to see it when they were filming it on Long Island, but they wouldn't let me on the lot. Then it appeared at a theater and I bought a ticket. They used only two lines of my story. I wouldn't have recognized it if I hadn't sold it myself.

Great Thrill, She Says.

"It's a great thrill to sell a story to the movies—sometimes you make as much off one story as in ten years of writing. But, most authors would jump at the chance for a guarantee of $2,500 a year."

Bushy-haired Chester Crowell, newspaper and magazine writer, emphasized the hazards of free lance writing.

"Art is the wildest gamble," he said of his profession. "I've been writing for 20 years and my income has varied from $3,000 to $30,000. In 1930 I made $30,000 and in 1931 I don't think I made $1,000. In the course of 25 to 30 years, if you have an airtight copyright law, an author may eat comfortably if he sells one of 20 stories.

"We authors don't object to leaving our work to posterity, but we hate to starev to death in the meantime."

House Gets Two Bills For Parks Acquisition

Two bills authorizing the Secretary of Interior to take possession of certain park areas in Virginia were introduced in the House yesterday by Representative DeRouen (Democrat), of Louisiana, and referred to the Public Lands Committee.

One of the bills authorizes the Federal Government to accept the cession of the Shenandoah National Park, while the other would permit the Interior Department to acquire and develop for public recreational purposes the Chopawamsic area near Dumfries, Va., about 25 miles from Washington.

Committe Asks Army Air Fleet Of 4,000 Ships

Five-Year Active Duty for 1,350 Reserve Aviators Urged by Officers.

National defense plans were given a powerful boost yesterday when the House Military Committee recommended building a fleet of 4,000 military airplanes and War Department officials prepared to press today for authority to call 1,350 reserve pilots to active duty for a period of five years.

Holding that "our Nation is no longer protected from air attacks because of the wide extent of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," the Military Committee report, drafted by Chairman Rogers (Democrat), of New Hampshire, of the Aviation sub-committee, declared the equipment of the Army Air Corps is "impotent" and "inadequate."

Testimony of Assistant Secretary of War Woodring before an appropriations sub-committee was quoted, in which he presented figures indicating that, allowing for wash-outs, deliveries and other considerations, the Army Air Corps will have approximately 777 airplanes on July 1, 1936.

Cites Other Nations.

"We are reliably informed," said the report, "that foreign nations have from 5,000 to 10,000 planes ready for military purposes. As to the utter inadequacy of America's air force we need but recall the testimony of Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Army Air Corps, before the Appropriations Committee in December, 1935."

Westover told the group that on June 30, 1937, the Army would have an estimated 770 airplanes, "with about 529 planes classed as obsolete on account of having passed the 5-year age limit."

General staff and Air Corps officers will parade before members of the House Military Affairs Committee this morning in an effort to secure authorization for calling the reserve fliers.

At the present time the assignment of the reserve pilots to active duty is blocked by existing law which limits the service to 550 reserve officers, 500 of whom can serve one year and the remainder two years.

General staff officers feel that it is uneconomical to assign a flier to such a short period of active duty after completion of his training at the Air Corps Training Center.

"Teamwork" Called Stake.

Another argument they will put forward at today's hearings is that the unit training or "teamwork" of G. H. Q. squadrons cannot be developed in a period of one year and under existing conditions of quick turnover. Efficiency of the "Nation's first line of defense" thus is being impaired, they state.

The assignment of 1,350 reserve officers to active duty would nearly double the Army's pilot strength. In a recent article published in The Post, Maj. Gen. Westover, chief of the Air Corps wrote:

"We now have 1,343 officers and 15,111 enlisted men in the Air Corps. We have 189 reserve officers on extended active duty and 312 flying cadets, of which number 139 are on duty with tactical units, the remainder still undergoing instruction at school."

Sugar Benefits $923,000.

Manila, March 24 (AP).—The Manila sugar section of the AAA reported today benefit payments to Philippine sugar planters during the last two weeks totaled $923,000. Approximately $2,000,000 more derived from processing taxes remains to be paid.

Fortune Smiles On 3 Men Here In Sweeps Draw

Two to Split Consolation Prize as Irish Race Entry Is Scratched.

Nathan Tabor, 35, of 4330 Yuma street, an interior decorator who held a winning ticket on Tapinois, which was drawn and scratched, will receive a "consolation" prize of $3,570.

Edward Garner, 45, of 815 F street southwest, an inspector in the city refuse department, and Frank Neale, 39, of 854 G street northeast, a clerk in the Patent Office, were joint holders of a ticket on Battling Still, also a nonstarter. They will share a second residual prize, leaving each $1,785 to the good.

Winners Overjoyed.

It was the third successive year that Garner and Neale, both of whom are single, had purchased sweepstake tickets jointly. When informed of their good luck, both were overjoyed.

"Gee, that's more money that I ever had in my life!" exclaimed Garner.

Neale, who has been employed in the Patent Office for the last 12 years, said he would "keep the money for a rainy day."

Garner, who has been with the Refuse Department for 24 years, had no intention of quitting his job. A war veteran, he intends to share both his bonus and sweepstakes money with his father and sister who live with him.

"One thing I will get out of all this money will be a pleasant vacation this summer," he added.

Tabor, owner of the Home Modernizing Co., at 1009 Ninth street northwest, said he would use part of the money to improve his business.

"But I'm going to mix business with pleasure in spending this money," he continued.

Tabor has a 15-year-old son and a 10-year-old daughter, both of whom, he said, would share in his fortune.

$1,120,000 to Americans.

Dublin, Irish Free State, March 24.—The great flag-bedecked Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes drum, manned by endless squads of pretty nurses, sent a golden stream of about $1,120,000 to America today.

Tomorrow the drum, which looks like a gigantic churn, rolls on to finish the draw. And tonight 325 Americans and their relatives were richer by about $3,600 each as a result of tickets pulled out of the drum today in Dublin city hall.

A fortunate few of those will win thousands of dollars more, inasmuch as 27 Americans hold tickets on five hot Grand National favorites in the race at Aintree Friday, on which the draw is based.

Americans Win 45%.

Americans won almost exactly 45 per cent of the 728 prizes drawn today, indicating the United Sattes is now buying about half of the tickets sold in the sweeps, started in 1930. In this, the seventeenth draw, a total of £2,491,162 was collected.

After deduction of expenses and benefits for 52 Irish hospitals, prizes totaling £1,453,754 (about $7,268,770) will be distributed in blocks of £100,000 each. The residue will be parceled out in ten residual cash prizes of £5,375½ each, which will be pulled out of the drum tomorrow.

Holders of tickets on the horse that wins will get about $150,000.

The drum was sealed tonight in the gayly festooned hall, decorated with the seals and flags of American States and nations, and was guarded by towering Irish policemen. Arc lights which blazed all day were turned off and the band rested after its day-long efforts to entertain the crowd during lulls in the drawing.

Catholic Priest, At Brightwood 14 Years, Dies

High Mass Will be Said Friday at Church for Rev. Hanneman.

The Rev. Benedict Hanneman, 40, for 14 years assistant pastor of Nativity Catholic Church in Brightwood, died at Georgetown Hospital late Monday after a short illness.

Born in Baltimore, Father Hanneman was educated at Calvert Hall College in Baltimore, then at St. Charles College at Catonsville, Md., and later St. Mary's College. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1921 and went to St. Luke's, Sparrows Point, Md., as pastor. After a year there he was transferred to the Nativity as assistant pastor. Later, he became senior assistant.

Interested in dramatics, several years ago he organized the parish dramatic club. He also was spiritual director of the sodality.

While preparing plans for a shrine to Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal he became ill of pneumonia Friday and was taken to Georgetown Hospital.

His body will rest in the parish rectory, 6000 Georgia avenue northwest, until 9 p. m. today, when it will be placed in the church to lie in state. A requiem high mass will be said Friday at 10:30 a. m. The body will then be sent to Baltimore, for burial in Holy Redeemer Cemetery.

Funeral Rites For Capt. Mills Set for Today

Aviator Killed in Crash Will Be Buried at Arlington.

Funeral services for Capt. Samuel P. Mills, Army flier who was killed in a crash at Fort Slocum, N. Y., last Sunday, will be held at the Fort Myer chapel this morning at 10 o'clock.

Burial, with full military honors will be in Arlington National Cemetery. Chaplain Ralph Deibert will officiate.

The following captains of the Air Corps will act as honorary pallbearers: Edward V. Harbeck, jr., Alfred W. Marriner, Lowell Smith, David S. Seaton, James C. Cluck and Mervin E. Gross. A formation of airplanes with one blank file will fly over the grave, weather permitting.

Capt. Mills was killed when he attempted to make a forced landing on the parade ground at Fort Slocum. He was returning from Boston at the time of the accident, having flown Representative Charles W. Tobey, of New Hampshire, there on Friday.

Capt. Mills was on duty in the office of the chief of Air Corps in the public relations division. He lived in Clarendon, Va., and is survived by his wife and two young children.

Dr. Prochazka Dies; Dyestuffs Pioneer

East Orange, N. J., March 24 (AP).—Dr. George A. Prochazka, 80, who played an important part in developing the dye industry in the United States, died unexpectedly today in his apartment.

He was born in Milwaukee September 3, 1855. In 1868 he went abroad to study chemistry.

Returning to this country, he first became associated with Stevens Institute of Technology. He later created the dyestuffs department of Heller & Merz Co., and also aided the United States Tariff Commission in formulating legislation for developing a self-contained American dyestuffs industry.

He and his brother formed the Central Dyestuff & Chemical Co., of Newark, in 1898.

Dr. Prochazka retired 12 years ago. He was a member of the American Chemical Society and the American Institute of Chemical Engineers.

His wife, two sons, George A., jr., of East Orange, and J. Albert, of Roselle, and a daughter, Ottilie, survive.

THE boys along motor row know their stuff when they call the spirited Buick SPECIAL plenty hot—their pet name for it is "a ball of fire!"

But you're doing a great car a grave injustice if you think of this phenomenal performer in terms of speed alone.

There's a new kind of smoothness in this oil-quiet valve-in-head straight-eight engine that shortens your journeys as surely as will its livelier action.

There's a new kind of steadiness and road-poise in this husky underpinning—as the miles dream by you'll find no tension to take its toll in aches, strains, "cricks" in the neck.

There's eye-wink obedience—no pulling or yanking is needed on the SPECIAL'S wheel to guide it, and a dainty feminine slipper fully masters its tiptoe hydraulic brakes.

And there's a new kind of safety in its Knee-Action comfort, its balance of power and control, its road-hugging stability, its full complement of such modern features as the solid steel "Turret Top."

True, this brilliant car does have thrilling nimbleness and flash response to the throttle—it can stream across the landscape as fast as prudence or the law allows.

But there's never a quiver or a wobble or an uncertain moment in the longest day of driving, and every mile you get the solid feeling of security that Buick has built under you.

So take a SPECIAL out for a ten-mile run—test it for "get-along" or get-away as you like—from the first moment you'll know that for all its spirit it's as safe as you are.

Its price is the lowest ever put on a Buick—the upkeep is what you'd expect of a six—only two or three dollars more a week than you'd pay to buy the lowest-priced cars and it's yours!

A Matter Of Principle.

The budgetary savings resulting from the refusal of the Senate to reconsider its refusal to appropriate funds for the Florida Ship Canal are substantial. But the importance of the victory won by Senator Vandenberg, who led the fight against the appropriation, is much greater than the material gains would indicate.

To be sure, the Senator objected strongly to a proposal to sink from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 in a waterway that, in the opinion of experts, has little economic justification. His chief arguments, however, were directed against the methods employed by the Administration to secure funds with which to carry on an undertaking that it had not approved.

A major issue of principle was involved in this particular contest, namely, whether Congress should recognize an obligation to complete an undertaking because the President had initiated it. Certainly, if $5,000,000 sufficed to assure the construction of a canal costing from 30 to 40 times that sum, outlay of a few thousand dollars from some contingent fund might with equal logic be made the excuse for an expenditure running into astronomical sums.

By refusing, therefore, to accept any responsibility for salvaging the sum which the President has expended upon the Florida enterprise the Senate has emphasized the fact that Congress controls the purse strings, even though sometimes it foolishly relinquishes its powers by voting lump-sum appropriations to be spent at Executive discretion.

The money already expended in launching the canal project will have been well spent if it forces home the importance of a return to sound methods of appropriation and conveys a warning to the President against usurpation of legislative powers.

The Military Appropriation.

It is unfortunate that War Department appropriations are not more distinctly separated into military and nonmilitary expenses. Many a casual newspaper reader may have failed to note that of the record $611,000,000 appropriation passed by the Senate on Monday, over $226,000,000 is allocated to river and harbor development and flood control. Many must have noticed that the Senate added $66,000,000 to the bill as passed by the House, perhaps without realizing that $58,000,000 of this net increase was for such engineering projects.

The confusion does not merely foster the impression, particularly abroad, that the American people are becoming armament minded. It also encourages unscientific appropriation and administrative confusion. Senator Copeland, in charge of the War Department measure, openly admitted that the House appropriation for non-military outlays had been doubled as a venture in "boondoggling." At a time when the WPA is asking for another $1,500,000,000 it is the more disgraceful that work-relief items should be voted into the Nation's defense appropriations.

Stripped of these extras, the War Department can make out a good case for the claim that the current appropriation is not as exorbitant as it appears. It increases the Regular Army to a peace-time footing of nearly 180,000, but that is only equivalent to the standing army of Czechoslovakia, if we blind our eyes to nearly 200,000 more men in our federalized National Guard. It is further noteworthy that the current appropriation aims to build an air force greater than that of any other power. For the United States, however, it can be argued that the airplane should be regarded as a purely defensive weapon.

None the less, when all discounts have been made, the current national defense appropriations remain sufficiently startling to cause other than budgetary anxiety. They are particularly subject to criticism because they indicate that the military establishments are quietly building the foreign policy of the United States in place of the Department of State. In so doing they are clearly reckoning beyond the defense needs of this fortunately-situated Nation.

An isolationist policy would demand a powerful defensive navy, a well-equipped but relatively small air force, and probably no increase whatsoever in the military establishment. A policy of regularized co-operation with other nations in behalf of world peace would call for a smaller navy, though perhaps a larger air force and army. But striking simultaneous increases in the naval, the military and the air arms is clear Machtpolitik, a "power policy" pure and simple.

By foreign observers this power policy will be interpreted as meaning that the United States intends to be able to assert its strength in troubled areas abroad, even while continuing to pay lip-service to isolationist and "good neighbor" doctrines. And it is neither healthy nor helpful when the diplomacy of a nation speaks a language so sharply at variance with the program of its military advisers.

Why All The Secrecy?

Public interest in the alleged payments of enormous benefits to a few wealthy farmers first arose several months ago when James R. Howard, former president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, charged that ten individuals had obtained no less than $562,000 out of the processing taxes for 1933. One of these farmers, Mr. Howard said, is a grower of 2,000,000 bushels of wheat per year on Indian land rented from the Government for a few cents per acre.

Farmers responsible for this complaint were particularly annoyed because the producers said to be drawing these staggering subsidies cultivate the soil on a mass-production basis, apparently reaping large profits. According to Mr. Howard, five cotton raisers in the South obtained an aggregate of $380,000 from the AAA for plowing up cotton. The need for investigating that report is emphasized when it is linked with the unemployment of labor, and the displacement of tenants in the cotton belt, because of crop curtailment.

Publication of a list of these beneficiaries is essential, if only to counteract the rumors that a first-class scandal is being suppressed with difficulty. Congress requires corporations to report individual salaries of more than $15,000, and those data are made available to the public. The wisdom of thus exposing the private affairs of individuals to public scrutiny is open to question. But there can be no reasonable objection to publication of benefits received by individuals from the public treasury. Certainly the policy of keeping this public business secret cannot be reconciled with the practice of making private affairs public.

Senator Vandenberg's request for a list of AAA payments over $10,000 is further supported by the use he intends to make of this information. He does not question the legality of these disbursements, but is merely seeking information that has a vital bearing upon the tax bill that Congress has been asked to pass to finance the new farm benefit program.

Under the old adjustment system there was some justification for the payment of enormous sums to individual farmers, since the processing taxes through which these funds were raised placed a definite handicap upon the marketing of their crops. Since the processing taxes have been found unconstitutional, however, the relationship between specific taxes and farm subsidies has completely disappeared. The present plan is to tax undivided corporation earnings to finance the so-called farm conservation payments. Yet those benefits will probably be distributed in much the same ratio as were the processing taxes. It will tax all the ingenuity of Secretary Wallace to defend outright grants of thousands of dollars to individual farmers who have already grown wealthy through cultivation of the soil without subsidies.

Incidentally, if the new farm act had been anything more than a vote-buying expedient, Congress would have scrutinized the list of large AAA beneficiaries before, rather than after, that measure was passed.

A Showdown In Order.

When Senator Black's lobby investigating committee embarked upon the policy of promiscuously sweeping telegrams into its dragnet, it violated one of the basic principles of democratic government. Unreasonable search and seizure is intolerable among a free people, regardless of the cause it may be intended to serve. With the first public outcry against the committee's OGPU methods, the Senator should have recognized his blunder and reverted to defensible means of investigation.

Instead, Mr. Black and his colleagues are moving ever closer to the tactics of outright tyranny. First, the committee took advantage of Federal Communications Commission agents to obtain private messages that seem to have no relationship to its ostensible purpose. More recently, the committee permitted a confidential telegram obtained through its fishing expedition to be read in the House of Representatives, in defiance of legal effort to forbid such action. Now it has actually warned telegraph companies against notifying clients whose telegrams have been subpenaed.

In short, the committee's tactics have evolved from snooping to brazen intimidation. It would be only a short step further to outright censorship of the mails, as practiced in the European dictatorships.

Compromise with such an attitude is out of the question. The lobby investigating committee has challenged the right of the people to keep their private communications free from Federal inquisitors. If the guarantees of the fourth amendment are to be upheld this challenge must be courageously met. Instead of yielding to threats, the telegraph companies should stand firmly on their constitutional rights and force a showdown with senatorial investigators inclined to run amuck.

Apparently telegraph officials have yielded to the committee's demands because they fear governmental persecution. However, there is a point beyond which the surrender of private messages cannot be carried without endangering their vital interests. The public will not continue using telegraph wires to convey so large a share of its messages if they continue to be subjected to this secret snooping. A courageous fight by the telegraph companies is clearly the means of protecting their own constitutional rights, as well as those of the public.

Friendly Warning From Italy.

Mussolini's decree calling for the nationalization of large-scale industries will, he says, be facilitated by reason of the fact that the state possesses a Reconstruction Institute, similar to our RFC, which already holds a large and often a controlling percentage of company stocks. The suggested parallel will certainly not diminish fears freely voiced in the recent House debate over the bill exempting RFC holdings of national bank preferred stock from all taxation.

That particular measure was merely intended to repair an omission in the original act establishing the RFC which was supposed to provide for general tax exemption. Nevertheless, the House was only induced to approve the bill last week after much persuasion, following a previous decisive rejection. The opposition to the measure was undoubtedly due in large part to a fear that tax exemption would add to the power of Federal lending agencies, encourage them to extend the scope of their interests, and make them dangerous competitors of private business.

While the House members were more immediately concerned about the effect of such an expansion of holdings upon tax revenues and upon the profits of private industry, there were unquestionable signs of an awakened perception of the dangers to the system of private enterprise emanating from a "disposition on the part of Government to get into every sort of business."

The New Surgeon General.

Public health circles approve, and the State of Maryland may take pride in, the selection of Dr. Thomas Parran, Jr., to succeed Dr. Cumming as Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. Both by record and by background the new appointee is well qualified for this highly responsible position.

There has been comment on Dr. Parran's family connection with Republican politics and the fact that he is the fourth Federal appointee recently to arrive in Washington via Albany, N. Y. The Administration deserves congratulations for its indifference to the political background of this able technician. And because New York is commonly recognized as having the most highly developed public health service in the country, the progression from the office of its commissioner to that of national health director is natural.

Dr. Parran's nomination, yet to be confirmed, had been generally anticipated. From his first service as an assistant surgeon in the health service 20 years ago, he has shown steady development both as scientist and administrator. Particularly noted for his interest in the control of venereal disease, his organization of a State-wide social hygiene system in New York won for him high acclaim.

It is especially reassuring to find a man of Dr. Parran's caliber assuming the direction of the Nation's public health department at a time when, as a consequence of the social security act, its responsibilities are bound to enlarge to a point never visualized before.

It is said that 18 persons in Budapest killed themselves recently after listening to a radio broadcast featuring the song, "Gloomy Sunday." We Americans are sturdier people. We can listen to an amateur play the bagpipes, and go serenely on our way.

According to a survey, the average person's speaking vocabulary is less than 3,000 words. Still, that's ample for talking about the weather and the neighbors.

Another excellent feature about storing up treasure in heaven is that no government can take it away from you and hand it to some boondoggler.

"Men have been eating fish 5,000 years." It doesn't seem to have helped much.

Practice Before Theory.

From the Des Moines Register.

Adoption of the inductive approach in the teaching of such subjects as money and banking and economic planning has attracted many new students to the classes of Dr. William T. Foster at Tufts College. This reverses the usual method in such courses of using discussions of theory as the approach to concrete problems.

In Dr. Foster's classes, newspapers are the first textbooks. Actual situations and issues in current news are employed to lead the students into discussions of the theories involved therein.

Dr. Foster not only employs concrete situations as his starting point, but the situations he chooses are of immediate contemporary interest. His students work on actual problems before they have even been solved by those who have to deal with them in real life.

The idea sounds promising.

Soil Conservation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much discussion and thought has been provoked by the farm problem, especially since the AAA case. The issues of crop control and soil conservation are by no means exhausted ones, as evidenced by your editorial of March 23, "Conservation as a Mask."

One apparent and obvious conclusion may be drawn relative to the Administration's treatment of this problem. Political advantage to be gained in the November election is the major consideration; an honest, permanent solution is a very minor and secondary one. Witness the haste with which the Administration concocted a plan to continue benefit payments to the farmers. It is absolutely necessary for Roosevelt to carry the farm vote to be re-elected in November. Considering that Landon may be the Republican nominee and threaten Roosevelt's power with the Middle-western farmers, one cannot escape the feeling that the Administration's attempts are supersaturated with political advantages to be gained at the November polls.

Unless I be guilty of a very superficial view of the problem, I am unable to appreciate and comprehend the connection between crop control and soil conservation. The necessity for crop control is based on the premise of overproduction. This theory put into practice by AAA resulted in curtailing the cultivation of many thousands of acres of marginal land. Soil conservation has for its purpose the reclaiming of sub-marginal lands to profitable productivity. If this be true, what is the reason (other than politics) to reclaim these lands when already our marginal lands give us a surplus of agricultural commodities? This unwarranted linking of crop control with soil conservation by the Administration could not be for the purpose of perpetuating the "necessity" of benefit payments to the farmers by the Federal Government.

Lest the reader misunderstand, I am wholeheartedly in favor of a permanent soil conservation program divorced from any Federal Government attempt to control agricultural production. The only possible exit for the Administration in this dilemma is to leave soil conservation for the Republicans. They suggested it first, anyway.

More On Section 213.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to reports, another attempt is being made to induce Congress to repeal Section 213 of the economy act relating to married women holding positions in the Government service.

As a matter of justice and equity, the law should not be changed—unless it be to further restrict the employment of married women in the Government service—for the reason that where married couples are employed a favor is bestowed that is not shown to other employes. Furthermore, with millions of men now unemployed, many of whom are undoubtedly fully competent to fill Government positions, it would seem most unfair and unjust to confer favors upon certain individuals simply because they are married, when, as a matter of fact, the salary of the husband should be and is sufficient to support both husband and wife. The present salaries paid Government employes are, as a rule, far in excess of those paid by private establishments for similar service.

The constant talk about efficiency on the part of Government employes is nauseating to all who are familiar with the situation. It has been said, no doubt with truth, that the greatest efficiency necessary is getting one's name on the Government pay roll. Once on the pay roll, the life of the Government employe is a comparatively easy and lucrative one for the average wage earner.

There are exceptions, of course, where injustices are done and where there is no redress, but such cases are comparatively few. In the case of married couples, when both husband and wife are employed, the favor bestowed is twofold and tends not only to neglect of home duties on the part of the wife, but to extravagance and waste on the part of both.

A Newsboy's Viewpoint.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been my impression during the years of service of Senator Carter Glass that he has enjoyed the sympathy of public feeling due to his honest effort in the interest of the people.

His remarks about newsboys recently do not seem in keeping with his past fairness. I am sure that his being awakened is not as important as a newsboy's earning an honest living.

Thousands of men and women look daily during the rush hours for the newsboy. It is the one means for them to earn an honest penny. I am sure that the Senator could not be so biased in his annoyance that he would waste his time keeping these boys from making honest pennies.

The Senator has enjoyed benefits of this free country that few will ever have. This country's liberty should not be bridled by the whims of an honorable gentleman who is elected into office to preserve and protect those principles of American citizenship. A NEWSBOY.

"Senseless Snooping."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our professional governmental "snoopers" and rabid "investigators" have made the shocking discovery that in some instances telephones have been leased to race track gamblers.

We can be reasonably certain, however, that these and other speculators at least paid their bills, which is more than can be said for certain Democrats, who incurred expenses, totaling over $30,000, during the last campaign which the Bell system has been unable to collect. Please page Jim Farley for additional details.

Following the investigation of American Telephone and Telegraph, the cost of which will quite naturally be shouldered by the already weary taxpayer, why not look into the "inner workings" of all the utilities? No doubt there are instances of gambling houses, speakeasies and other questionable resorts being furnished with gas and electric power. And think of the crooks that send telegrams!

And why stop with the utilities? Aren't autos being bought by men of ill-repute? In future, one should present some character credential before he is allowed to purchase a car, install a phone, or turn on the electricity.

Hasn't the time arrived to end the senseless snooping and wasting of taxpayers' money? Or are we to be "Russianized?"

The Holy Land Exhibit.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No amount of advertising could be too much for the very beautiful Holy Land exhibit at the Pythian Temple on Ninth street. My one wish after looking at it for over an hour is that every Sunday school teacher in this city should see it. It is the finest education in Bible study given visually that I have ever seen.

The illumination is a work of art. Men interested in electricity should not fail to see it. It seems as though it would be impossible to accomplish what has been done here.

Such a worth-while exhibit should be seen by hundreds and hundreds of people, and the greatest credit is due the two brothers who conceived the idea and brought it before the public with your sponsorship.

It is very fitting to have this beautiful exhibit at Easter time, and I hope it can stay some time to give all a chance to see it.

Note To Novelists.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How often has it been said that the great American novel remains to be written? I venture to repeat this question in its broadest sense, for we have had a number of first-rate men of letters. Our literature, like the country, is still very young which may account for our having produced but one solitary literary genius, Poe. Excepting, perhaps Henry James, none of America's novelists has reached the greatest heights.

We have several writers of fiction capable of turning out good workmanship, but do they select material for novels that ever makes a truly universal appeal? In contemplating the vast panorama of American life there is no dearth of subject matter for an exceptional romance.

The obituary of an old lady who was just died in California contains enough glimpses from our dramatic history to whet the imagination of any writer. Born into the primitive conditions of frontier life, she lived through the formative years of the Republic. A young woman during the Civil War, she grew to mature womanhood as the West was being conquered. The World War struck, and finally the great depression changed the National outlook before our heroine's long life came to a close.

This daughter of a Mississippi steamboat pioneer looked down on five generations of her flesh and blood. She was as much the representative of an era and the founder of a dynasty on the North American continent as a Madariaga of Ibanez on that of South America.

To paint the career of this patriarch amid the changing scenes of her environment and a contemporary history of the lives of her descendants fusing the whole into one great American scene of fiction challenges the pen of a novelist. GUY d'AULBY.

Referendum For Subsidies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorail "Subsidies and Politics," was most timely and excellent.

The payment of large sums of money to certain large groups just prior to election time is about the same thing as buying an election. Those receiving these big handouts, except in rare cases, would not vote against the party in power. Enough votes would thus be obtained to swing the election.

The Administration in effect says, "We are going to stay in power, dislodge us if you can. We are hell-bent for election, what can you do about it?" Their own brazen insolence and utter contempt for principle may yet defeat them.

The granting of subsidies to any large group should first be passed on by a referendum vote of the entire population. That is the only way to prevent outrages of this sort. The taxpayer who digs up the money to pay billions in subsidies, certainly should have some say about it.

To Fight Famine.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How wonderful it would be if Uncle Sam could go to huge Government-owned granaries and rush food supplies to the stricken areas where the horrifying specter of famine looms!

The New Deal is loaded with "air experts" who use up thousands of radio hours to tell of the wonderful days to come when crop destruction will be the order of the day. These "air experts" never have vision clear enough to forsee hot and dry weather, or floods, or other manifestations of Nature's destructive power. Let's rid the Government pay rolls of these proponents of the "more abundant life" right now.

The United States Senate has decided to "save" $5,000. It will not investigate the WPA. Thus goes an opportunity of discovering whether WPA really stands for Wampum for Political Activities.

The Post Impressionist

Two and Two Make Five.

Post Office, Wednesday.

THIS columnist is perfectly willing to believe that "figures never lie;" indeed, we have always considered them completely inhuman. But now it seems that, whether they lie or not, a great many mathematical authorities have been lying about them.

Mathematics, mathematicians ever asserted, is an exact science. Yet here are mathematicians disagreeing, among their exact selves, over the fundamental question of where merely playful arithmetic ends and positively frivolous algebra begins.

* * *

Not that we pretend to have understood the difference between algebra and arithmetic. However, we knew that every mathematician maintained there was a difference, so we accepted the word of an authority still "widely used" in Washington's public schools—where, we are credibly informed, both these subjects are occasionally taught. Webster's International Dictionary unqualifiedly declares:

"The essential difference between arithmetic and algebra is that the former deals with concrete quantities, while the latter deals with symbols whose (sic) values may be any out of a given number field."

* * *

From childhood's hour until an hour ago that was good enough. But then we unwarily quoted Webster's expert to Dick Jarvis, who dropped into smoke one of our cigars.

"Pigwash!" said he. "What does the common or garden variety of multiplication table deal with, if not with abstractions?"

Whereupon, our cigar being thoroughly alight in his mouth, he departed . . .

* * *

Such a dismissal of the discussion was easy enough for an untutored mind like Richard's. But we couldn't let it rest there. In an endeavor to salvage our faith in Webster, we—no, we didn't "contact"—we established communication with Dr. G. A. Miller, of the Department of Mathematics, University of Illinois.

* * *

Picture, if you can, our disappointment. Dr. Miller says: "It is impossible to prove that arithmetic now deals relatively more with concrete quantities than algebra."

For that matter, why "now?" Dr. Miller indicates that the past was just as bad. He refers us to the Rhind Mathematical Papyrus" (Egypt, 1700 B. C.).

* * *

Of course, according to Dr. Miller, mathematics—if by that term you refer to the surviving records of mathematics—is an infant science. Its written evidences run back barely 6,000 years, and concerning the first thousand of those six, little is certainly known.

You can demonstrate that the people of the pharaohs determined the frustum of a square pyramid by a method similar to that employed when you had, alas, to determine it yourself. You can pretty well prove that the Babylonians solved quadratic equations by completing the square, exactly as your high school son and daughter perform that trick today.

But then where are you?

You aren't anywhere.

* * *

Nevertheless, so far as the records do go, they go along, we find, with Dr. Miller's thesis as stated in the current number of the Scientific Monthly, where we sought his article on "Basal Facts in the History of Mathematics" for the purposes of the present column:

"There is no clear line of demarcation between arithmetic and algebra."

* * *

Now one authority will consider a certain mathematical form arithmatical; next year an equally sage authority will pronounce it algebraic. There's the theory of determinants, for instance: it was always being dragged back and forth—a very variable theory.

* * *

True: Since the end of the World War and the rise of the New Expansionism, algebra has been evincing definite imperialistic tendencies, elbowing its way into districts which, for at least a few years previous, were at pause under the undisputed jurisdiction of Arithmetic. But, take it all in all, the condition is one of shillyshally.

The entire science of Mathematics suffers from this blight. But select negative numbers for your consideration.

Neugebauer, of Copenhagen, has pointed out that even the ancient Babylonians used them, yet, says Dr. Miller, they were "developed during a period of more than 3,000 years before a satisfactory theory was published." And then "it became necessary for the pure mathematicians to abandon . . . the view that the ratio of a larger number to a smaller number always exceeds the ratio of a smaller number to a larger . . .

* * *

Well, anyway, don't you think that, just as soon as the League of Nations has cleansed up the little matter of the Rhineland and decided the minor issue between Haile Selassie and Benito Mussolini, it ought to delimit the Arithmetic-Algebra Frontier?

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

No Laughing Matter.

Paris, March 24.

IN the last five months I have seen three dictatorships in operation, and the experience confirms my belief that the death of Huey Long removed a terrible menace to the liberty of the United States. This may sound high powered, but I have been seeing some grim demonstrations of the condition which we narrowly escaped. It is alarming to realize that a majority of the people of Louisiana regarded Huey as their friend and were not only willing but eager to sign over their citizenship to him.

That was not so shocking when it happened in Italy, Germany and Austria, because those people had always lived under the authority of kings and armies. But the citizenship of the American was supposed to be a possession worth fighting for. Huey himself denied that he had dictatorial ambitions, insisting, on the contrary, that he was the protector of the common man.

But Mussolini and Hitler both say the same thing, and, like Huey, they proceed on the theory that the common man is too dumb to know what is best for him.

• • • •

BY TRICK and stratagem Huey Long had abolished the Legislature in Louisiana, and the two houses which were jumping through hoops for him at the time of his death were just as farcical as the so-called legislative bodies which answer the commands of the dictators in Rome and Berlin.

Elections in Louisiana also had been reduced to absurdity by the application of various laws which Huey had enacted, particularly the law permitting him to engage unlimited numbers of poll inspectors at $5 each to inspect the purity of the ballot.

Huey himself snickered as he pronounced the words "purity of the ballot" in explaining the purpose of this bill to the committee in Baton Rouge, for he knew and his Legislature knew that it really granted him the power to buy votes at $5 each, sufficient to corral the result in any doubtful precinct and charge the cost to the public treasury.

• • • •

IN Germany the Brown Shirts have now been superseded by the army and have lost most of their old power, but they were a bad lot when they were running wild. They could drag a man out of his bed at night and put him away in a concentration camp with the merest pretense of a trial, and often when a Brown Shirt happened to owe money to the prisoner, the accused was executed for treason or shot in the back while attempting to escape.

It was the same in Italy in the early years of fascism, and it would have been the same in our country under Huey Long if he had lived and enjoyed a few more of the political breaks which were bringing him along so alarmingly up to the day of his death. I don't believe we would have enjoyed that.

Huey had the heart and soul of a demagogue and dictator, and his closest associates in the development of his power were men of the same brutal type as Goebbels, Streicher, Roehm and the rest of Hitler's handy men.

• • • •

HUEY used to boast of the mileage of paved roads and the bridges which he had built and the grandeur of his State Capitol and the buildings of the State University, but Musolini and Hitler also boast of their roads and bridges and their railroad stations and model tenements. But the State Capitol of Louisiana had ceased to be a legislature, and the university, like Heidelberg and Munich, was no longer free.

Huey lynched freedom in the university when he kicked out of school half a dozen students of journalism for criticizing him in print, and his university president was a promising candidate for the office of director of education under the national dictatorship. He also had a clergyman lined up for the job of national bishop, and his system of persecuting his opponents by raising their taxes was a method of confiscation adjusted to the early stage of an elastic plan. He refused to permit any inspection of the public treasury accounts, and his appeal to enthusiasm in public appearances was as magnetic as Mussolini's or Hitler's, wit hthe additional menace of good-natured hilarity.

He could make the suckers laugh. There is no denying that he was a good fighter; all dictators are. But Huey was stealing the freedom of the very people he claimed to love, and he might have had them completely at his mercy in four years more.

Call For A Statesman

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

"THE British government are in favor of the imposition of an oil embargo by members of the League." So said Mr. Eden at Geneva on March 2, and the British public were surprised by this apparent return of their government to the principles of collective security. But on March 3 the same government published its White Paper on rearmament, proved by its demands for more and more armaments that its main motive is fear, its interest in collective systems almost perfunctory. For in its paper the government laid plans for what is rapidly becoming a two-power standard in the air, and by upping cruiser strength from 50 to 70 showed itself the first to break away from the limitations of the now defunct Washington Treaty.

Mr. Eden's statement at Geneva was by way of ornament to his agreement with the French proposal to have another shot at conciliating Mussolini, and the reason suggested for Eden's willingness to postpone sanctions still further was that he had been asked by M. Flandin what Britain would do if Hitler reoccupied the demilitarized zone of the Rhineland. If England wanted French support against Italy, would she please promise to help France in the Rhineland?

The League's conciliation offer was accepted by the Negus, provided it was in accordance with his own principles. But before the British government could reply to the French question Hitler reoccupied the Rhineland, offered to return to the League of Nations, sign pacts of nonaggression with all his neighbors, demilitarize all frontiers as far as his neighbors would do likewise.

To this step the immediate reaction of the countries of Europe was true to national form. Mussolini hoped to benefit by diversion of the League, canceled an order to cease fire in Abyssinia. France protested that never, never, never would she negotiate under force. Russia warned the western nations to be careful of the German viper. Britain said that on the one hand Hitler had seriously complicated European affairs by his illegal action, but on the other hand every proper attention should be paid to his positive proposals for a new peace.

HITLER'S action must be understood against the background of Germany's post-war history, and her immediate internal economic difficulties. In the eyes of the German people Hitler stands for the rehabilitation morally and physically of a nation bled white by her merciless victors. In his own eyes he is the protector of Germany and Europe against the terrors of communism.

This anti-Communist passion of his is so strong that although he is willing to flout existing treaties with Western European powers, fundamentally his determined wish is for peace and collaboration within Europe as protection against Russia. And it must be admitted in Hitler's favor that the various steps by which he has broken the war treaties, rebuilt his army, navy and air force, and repudiated the signs of inferiority imposed upon Germany, have been taken only after repeated efforts to secure justice by agreement.

IN spite, therefore, of French cynicism, it would be tragic presumption to assume that Hitler is not sincere when he says that Germany has now secured her equality by moving troops into the demilitarized zone, and is willing to re-enter a collective system. Nor does it undermine belief in his sincerity to explain his action as a drastic move to overcome internal difficulties. Trouble has been developing for some time between Dr. Schacht, Germany's economic dictator, and Hitler. Schacht necessarily comes into contact with foreigners, is concerned to relieve the economic strain to which isolation bred of Hitler's autarky and foreign antipathy, have produced in Germany. And many of Hitler's supporters were reported to be increasingly restless at the long postponment of the socialist parts of Hitler's economic program.

The most unsatisfactory part of Hitler's declaration before the Reichstag was his renewed attack on Bolshevism, although it is perhaps significant that it was Bolshevism and not Russia that he attacked. The permanent officials of the German foreign office have been endeavoring to tone down the Fuehrer's enmity against Russia, but the job is difficult. Hitler's phobia can be traced in part to hatred of the Socialist-minded politicians who, before the Nazi revolution, accepted Germany's position of vanquished and endeavored to carry out the unjust demands of the war victors. And in part it is the hysteria of the lower middle-class bourgeois for the imagined terrors of a symbolical bogeyman.

But granted this attitude, which is not based on reason, Germany finds her anxiety justified. Because of Germany's bitterness against Communism, the Russians have an agreement which permits their airplanes to enter Czechoslovakia by way of Roumania, puts Czechoslovakian landing fields at Russia's disposal in time of war, provides an aggressive defense against Germany. Prague is within one hour's flying time of Berlin.

• • • •

IT is extremely important, therefore, that Hitler should have included Czechoslovakia and Austria in his proffered pacts. The danger of German aggression lay not in an attack on the Ukraine in collaboration with Poland, but in a southward movement directed in a roundabout way against Russia. Germany might have been tempted ot attack Russia via the Danube. And her fear of Communism was not alleviated by the Franco-Russian pact, advanced by Hitler as so serious a breach of Locarno's terms as to destroy Locarno togethes. Both the French and the British have denied this interpretation, but to the German mentality it is self-evident that the French pact was just one more attempt to encircle Germany.

Although the immediate French response to Hitler's offers was to scoff in cynical indignation, demand sanctions against Germany, there are signs that some of the French have realized the necessity for readjustment. Since the war France has looked on the League as her main supporter in keeping Germany down. She has repeatedly repudiated Hitler's offers of conciliation, and is reluctant to enforce the League of Covenant against Italy mainly because that would break the Stresa front which was the latest line of defense against Hitler, formed after Germany returned to conscription.

But economic difficulties in France have induced some appreciation of the necessity for the nations of Europe to co-operate in friendly activity, instead of glowering at each other behind economic barriers. Unfortunately this new attitude is not yet strong enough to overcome the traditional anti-German fear which springs up whenever Germany shows signs of resenting her inferior status. France has already demanded action by the Locarno signatories against Germany, and it is therefore extremely probable that she will bloc German re-entry to the League.

BRITAIN'S part, so far, has been to say that if Germany had committed an act of aggression against France or Belgium she would at once fulfill her Locarno obligations. But this reoccupation of the Rhineland is not an act of aggression. As Sir Samuel Hoare put it in a note to France, Britain does not consider the negative act of not fulfilling a treaty on the same terms as an unprovoked act of aggression against another country. In such circumstances Britain will not support any illegal French demand for sanctions.

Mr. Eden says that Hitler's proposals must be considered. Baldwin said the same thing a year ago when Hitler made offers as he re-introduced conscription, but nothing came of this consideration except the present re-armament program. There is a terrible danger that nothing may be done this time. Many British are inclined to support Hitler. He has merely said what most of them believe to be a true statement of the conditions in which peace can be restored in Europe. But there are many who want us to re-arm, to refuse to side with France against Germany, to be friendly with Germany in the attack of Bolshevism, and otherwise to cut ourselves away from Europe, refuse to accept any new obligations.

The crucial point in the situation is whether or not Germany can be persuaded to co-operate with Russia, without prejudicing her cherished antipathy to Bolshevism. If this can be done—and Hitler says he will re-enter the League, of which Russia is a member—then the stage is set for rebuilding a new peace treaty, a new Locarno, a revived League of Nations. But if this is to become reality someone must play the part of "promoter;" someone must play the statesman in reconciling Hitler and France.

The only country qualified for the job is Britain, but unfortunately our present statesmen are busy scrapping the League finding a false security in armaments. Baldwin is out. So are MacDonald, Chamberlain, Churchill. Sir Samuel Hoare, who a brief six months ago was the halted mouthpiece of collective responsibility, is now crying speed, speed, speed, to urge on our rearmament and our isolation. Mr. Eden is about the only one left.

No End Of Books

By Theodore Hall

Birdie With a Yellow Bill

I WAS turning over just one more time in bed the other morning—this is known as the familiar essay opening, putting us all in a nice mood of human brotherliness—when one eye was so traitorous as to open and alight upon a book-self. "Wake Up and Live!" shrieked a book-jacket at me. I will not record my rude thoughts. I closed the eye.

Now, I had seen that book around for some time—but you know how it is. It's hard enough to be decent to one's own alarm clock. Assuredly Mrs. Dorothea Brande, the author, had been very ingratiating with her previous self-help opus, "Becoming a Writer"—a grand book, that. But in her present incarnation she reminded me a bit too much of the formidable lady in Saki—the one in "Reginald's Christmas Revel," who "always got up at some uncomfortable hour in the morning, and gave you the impression that she had been in communication with most of the European governments before breakfast."

Yet I was not in a position to make so deliciously malignant a riposte as did Reginald. I could only read the pesky book.

• • • •

LET me now record an about-face. Mrs. Brande's "Wake Up and Live" (Simon & Schuster, $1.75) strikes me as one of the giftiest and most pointed books to stir the stumps of us lazy humans. She tells what her method did for her; she charges into our ubiquitous excuse-making; and she lays down the law and the prophets on how to pick ourselves up by our bootstraps. Like Riley's birdie with a yellow bill, who hopped upon our window sill, she cries: "Ain't you 'shamed, you sleepy-head!"

Mrs. Brandie will now get up in an experience meeting and tell what happened to her. In the 20 years of life before she found her formula, this was her total writing output—17 short stories; 20 book reviews; half a dozen newspaper items; and one attempt at a novel abandoned less than a third done—less than two completed pieces of work a year!

And now, the "after taking" during but two years—three successful books, 24 articles, four short stories, 72 lectures and innumerable professional letters of advice. Thank you, Sister Brande.

• • • •

IT is Mrs. Brande's acute notion, in this book, that it takes as much energy to fail as to succeed. There exists, indeed, a very strong "will to fail" among us, a "will to death." It takes any number of forms, most of them beautifully reasonable to the victims. All these are examples of the "will to fail"—the day-dreamer; the man who just has to have two more hours sleep in order to keep fit; the legion of people who play solitaire and do cross-word puzzles; the heavy drinkers; the people who just have to go on an endless round of movies, theaters and cocktail parties; the aimless and incessant conversationalists; the people who are forever taking university courses to fit them for something still ahead; and, worst of all, the Universal Charmers.

Each of these is filling life with secondary activities so that there will be no time or energy to do one's best work. It is sheer self-sabotage.

• • • •

THE clew, the golden clew to a new direction, Mrs. Brande found in a passage from F. W. H. Myers which referred to the curing of stage fright by hypnotism: "Now the removal of shyness which hypnotic suggestion can effect is in fact a purgation of memory—inhibiting the recollection of previous failures and setting free whatever group of aptitudes is for the moment required." The hint blossomed before her. And she came out with her talisman——

"Act as if it were impossible to fail."

"You will find," she continues, "that if you can imaginatively capture the state of mind which would be yours if you knew you were going toward a pre-arranged and inevitable success, the first result will be a tremendous surge of activity, of freshness. Then—well, the only way to put it is that it will seem as though your mind gave a great sigh of relief, of gratitude for the liberation, and stretched itself to its fullest extent. This is the moment when one may be forgiven for feeling that there is something truly magical about the whole affair."

Further than the exhortation, Mrs. Brande gives 12 separate disciplines which she observes every day; such as "Spend one hour a day without speaking except in answer to direct questions."

It sounds worth a try. So in about a minute I'm going to be a Dorothean monk. And one of these mornings, if I can only get the other eye open, I confidently expect to be "truly magical."

Hearing Is Told A. T. & T. Rules Phone Industry

Control Is More Complete Than Any in Nation, Bickley Testifies.

The country's third largest business, the telephone industry, is dominated in every department by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the nearly $5,000,000,000 monopoly now being investigated by the Federal Communications Commission, John H. Bickley, chief investigating accountant for the FCC, testified at hearings yesterday.

Bickley said:

"By far the greater part of interregional communication of the United States is at the mercy of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. The absoluteness of this control is modified only by the extent of Government regulation. In no other industry in the Nation is control so manifest and complete.

At the end of the day, Samuel Becker, special FCC counsel, announced that today he would delve into the setup and operations of the Electrical Research Products, Inc., usually known as E. R. P. I., the subsidiary of the A. T. & T. which has granted liscenses and furnished equipment and technical service to talking motion pictures.

Apparently anticipating possibly sensational developments, a representative of a subsidiary of A. T. & T. passed out to newsmen immediately at the close of the afternoon session a prepared statement, titled "Memorandum," purporting to give a true and accurate story of E. R. P. I.'s formation, history and operations.

Little Objections.

Previously representatives of the telephone company had made but little objections to the testimony presented, and the handing out of a statement even before any disclosures have been made concerning E. R. P. I. aroused anticipation in some quarters. According to Walter S. Gifford, president of the A. T. & T. when interviewed last week, the company will present its answer to any conclusions drawn from the present proceedings after the hearings are over, in an attempt to win back any public good will lost by reason of the daily findings. The hand-out of the statement yesterday indicated possibly that the company is growing restive as the hearings continue, and intends to have its side presented concurrently with the testimony on the stand, observers believed.

Much of the day's two sessions in the oak-and-red leather Hearing Room B of the Interstate Commerce Commission was consumed in showing that the A. T. & T. controls absolutely 83 per cent of all telephones in the country, and more than 90 per cent of all telephone plants, equipment, and revenues, dominates long distance telephony by ownership of 98 per cent of toll wires, dominates all equipment manufacturing, and has wholly permeated the telephone trade associations.

It was brought out that while most of this ownership is admitted in financial statements by the parent company, the A. T. & T. also controls in various but effective ways all other important telephone companies, many of which are not believed by the public to be Bell System-owned.

Prepared Questions Asked.

By the device of placing Bickley, pilot of the vast $750,000 research into the A. T. & T. files throughout the Nation, on the stand and then asking him prepared questions for prepared answers, Becker, the small, dynamic F. C. C. counsel, sped through the entire corporate structure of the tremendous telephone organization in one day.

Acting as a "stooge" or "feeder," Becker plied Bickley with questions on the Bell System's scope and structure. Bickley, an old hand at investigating utilities, having participated in numerous recent utility studies, testified that the A. T. & T. is constructed in layers. First layer is the A. T. & T. itself, in two huge divisions, the long lines department and the general department. Under the latter is the second layer, which is actually the foundation of the company itself, the 23 associated companies throughout the country.

Then comes the third layer, the Bell-controlled connecting companies, of which there are 85. Forty-nine of these are directly controlled by the associate companies through ownership of more than 50 per cent of the voting stock. The other 36, it was shown, are connecting companies subject to "contingent control" by such devices as a minority stock interest coupled with long-term overdue uncollected loans from the parent company to the other stockholders of such a company, causing such stockholders to "vote right."

Bell-Interest Companies.

Under these come the Bell-interest companies, in which the A. T. & T. merely holds some sort of interest, not of majority power, and then the scattered and small independent companies, chiefly of rural subscribers organized by farmers to provide mutual local service, and many of which connect with Bell lines. Nearly all of these latter two groups buy all equipment from Bell subsidiaries, it also was shown.

The international range of the A. T. & T. also was demonstrated by a listing of the ramifications of its Canadian and foreign connections to show its monopoly of all national communications.

The "memorandum" distributed in view of Charles F. Hurd, special counsel for the A. T. & T., was explained by him to newsmen eager to understand the operations of E. R. P. I. in the motion picture field.

He echoed the plaint of President Gifford last week that "Our scientists are always developing things which we begin to market only to find ourselves having to build up a market for such products. When we are drawn into fields far from the telephone business and we have to get rid of the product."

Thus it was, he explained, when scientists in the Western Electric laboratories began developing sound recording in order to test phone equipment. They came out with talking pictures on their hands.

"Hill-and-Dale" Method.

A "hill-and-dale" method of recording voices on the record-grooves, combining greater tone accuracy with higher frequencies, was produced for sale to undertaking establishments, which needed a means of playing slow, sad music. Developed, this same device, when newly perfected, was first used to record all Grace Moore's songs before she had even put on make-up to film "One Night of Love," her smash success. After she had recorded all her songs, she was filmed in the act of merely miming the motions with her lips, while the sound engineers, and consequently the telephone officials, revealed Mr. Hurd, worried considerably over whether the public would "catch on." The public didn't, he added, but the telephone company had gotten pretty far afield.

Becker is expected to show today that the A. T. & T. has a monopoly on the manufacture of sound equipment. The company does not deny it, but claims it was legitimately drawn into the situation when a film company was unable to meet a debt to the A. T. & T. For a while the company even produced its own films at a Long Island Paramount studio, one of them featuring the late Texas "Hello Sucker" Guinan.

"None of these films was—ah—outstanding," said Mr. Hurd. Other sources said these shorts were what the trade terms "floppolas," or "turkeys."

Other outside interests of the A. T. & T. have involved artificial tin larynxes, automatic horse-race tishers and other almost unrelated products as a result of researches in their laboratories followed by marketing of developed inventions. Admitting that these were far afield from the telephone business, Mr. Hurd added: "But what can you do with them?"

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Roosevelt Week in Florida.

Miami Beach, March 25: President Roosevelt has reached Florida and it is all right, as most of the men with a surplus have gone back North anyhow.

• • • •

The President is fishing Florida waters. But with skimpy results. Al Smith was there ahead of him.

• • • •

The first day out Franklin hooked a sailfish and it staged its traditional hike atop the waves on its tail. "It's taking a walk," explained his secretary.

• • • •

A prominent Republican, who had to give up his 150-foot yacht four years ago and now fishes from a hired cabin cruiser, returned to the Miami docks yesterday smiling from ear to ear. He tossed a tarpon on the dock and exclaimed, "Well, that's one he didn't get!"

• • • •

Florida is Roosevelt conscious this week. Every day it fires him a salute from 100,000 slot machines. Should the Great White Father of the More Abundant Life come ashore he would find his money raising problem solved. All he has to do is to get Federal control of slot machines.

• • • •

Florida has gone slot-machine crazy. It probably never has been carried to such excesses in any other place in the country. Drug stores, hotel lobbies, restaurants, cafes, ice-cream parlors and even bookstores are packed with them.

• • • •

There are apothecary shops where you have to write your order for headache powders on paper. The clerks can't hear your voice above the clatter of the quarter machines.

• • • •

And not only quarter machines. There are batteries of 5, 10 and 50-cent machines with long lines of people - who - believe - everything waiting for a chance to be taken. Women predominate. Some bring the kiddies along, carrying lunch and staying for the day.

• • • •

Last week a prominent beach hostess put in a half dozen machines for a lawn party, and there is a rumor that they installed them at one wedding and two funerals this season.

• • • •

It is a study in incredible contradictions. Here in a country of incomparable sunshine, warmth and flowers thousands of people spend their lives indoors trying to double their petty cash. It seems like developing a beautiful garden and using it for a crap game.

And the joke of it is that Miami made a fight to bar the machines and the Supreme Court of Florida ruled them okay!

• • • •

Mr. Roosevelt ought to get a laugh out of that. And if the fish don't bite we suggest that he come ashore. You can get anything out of those slot machines, except money.

Can You Remember—

Away back when men who looked comical never had much chance of becoming leaders of great nations?

The fellow who saved money all his life for a rainy day never suspected that his country would put in automatic sprinklers and forbid umbrellas.

Speaking of remarkable memories, there is the man who insists he can recall when Willie Howard didn't do that choir scene.

The hitch-hiker who was always able to get a ride by displaying a sign, "If you don't pick me up I'll vote for Hoover," is now walking most of the time, according to reports from Republican headquarters.

Slot Machines Ban Is Signed by Peery

Richmond, Va., March 24 (AP).—Gov. Peery this afternoon signed the much-debated slot machine bill, which was revived in a Senate committee after having been dormant for several weeks, and passed in the closing days of the 1936 General Assembly.

The bill bans machines of "unpredictable outcome," with certain exemptions covering such as pinball games where no remuneration is involved.

Camp Bridge Lost.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 24.—Cumberland and Frostburg residents, who spend summer months on the South Branch of the Potomac, lost heavily as a result of the recent flood, which washed away the wire bridge at the Y. M. C. A. camp and seriously damaged the bridge near Springfield. Most of the cottages in the Springfield and Romney districts, owned by Cumberland people, were also washed away.

Girl to Feature Shoreham Acts

A girl "on a flying trapeze" will be one of the attractions designed to thrill children of Washington's diplomatic set when they attend the first matinee performance of Hamid's Circus in the main ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel this afternoon. There will also be clowns, acrobats, elephants, bears and trained dogs in the circus which is being given in matinee performances, today, tomorrow and Friday at 4 o'clock and Saturday at 2:30 for the benefit of the Children's Hospital.

This afternoon's circus entertainment is identical with that given recently in New York at the Beaux Arts Ball at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Among the members of the board of lady visitors of the hospital who will attend as special representatives of their group are Mrs. E. R. Finkenstaedt and her daughter, Sophie, for today's performance; Mrs. Charles D. Hayes tomorrow; Mrs. John B. Hollister, wife of Representative Hollister, and her son, John B. Hollister, jr., Friday, and Mrs. A. M. Nevius, and her son, Jack Nevius, Saturday.

Miss Beulah Goodrich is chairman of a group consisting of some of the members of the Junior League hospital committee, who will serve as hostesses on each of the afternoons. These include Miss Betsy Burke, Miss Nanita Miles, Miss Priscilla Robb, Miss Ann Sterrett, Miss Ruth Sowers and Miss Elizabeth Lyster.

Mrs. Forrest B. Royall, wife of Lieut. Comdr. Royall, and Miss Stellita Stapleton, also members of the Junior League hospital committee, supervised a performance of the circus for boys and girls of the Christ Child Society yesterday afternoon at the Christ Child Society auditorium.

Miss Katherine Fuqua and Miss Ethel Mae Taylor have been donating their time and automobiles each day assisting in publicity for the circus matinees.

'Mme. Butterfly' Planned In Operalogue Version

Prominent persons in Washington society and club circles are planning to attend the operalogue version of "Mme. Butterfly," to be presented by Regina Vicarinofi celebrated operatic prima donna, at the Washington Club this evening.

The recital is a new form of musical entertainment which gives the opera story, principal arias and orchestral themes by the accompanying pianist. Miss Vacarino presents the program in costume to create the illusion of a complete opera in miniature. The International Art Forum, Mme. Conti Amelia Conti, president, is sponsoring the presentation.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

After passing the winter in near-by La Plata, Md., Mr. and Mrs. Julian Edgeworth Gillespie will leave for Turkey about the middle of April. They are no strangers in the Near East and the Balkans, for Mr. Gillespie has been a financial and economic adviser there for the past 16 years.

Mr. Gillespie, who speaks Turkish fluently, will go with his family to Istanbul, the famed city of song and legend. Mrs. Gillespie and their three attractive children are visiting her mother, Mrs. Adrian Posey, at La Plata. They are awaiting the return of Mr. Gillespie from Texas on April 1, when final preparations will be made for the long journey.

A warm welcome will be accorded to the Gillespies from the international colony and Turkish officials when they return to Istanbul, where Mr. Gillespie has served as commercial attache since 1926. They are very popular with that group.

Among the close frends of Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie in Washington is Senator Thomas Connally, of Texas. Mr. Gillespie was born in Brownwood, Tex., and went to school in Dallas. When the war broke out he was practicing law in Texas, but joined the A. E. F. and became one of its youngest captains. In the days of stress which followed the World War Mr. Gillespie served as assistant United States trade commissioner for the Near East and the Balkans, and afterward as commercial attache at the American Embassy in Istanbul.

During part of their stay in this country, since returning from Turkey last autumn, Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie and their children were guests of United States Senator from Arkansas and Mrs. Joseph Robinson.

One of "Aunt Mary" Middleton's boys got married in Washington last week. News of the marriage of Alexander Hanson Robertson Middleton to Mrs. Duboss Surrat at the Church of the Covenant brought many telegrams of congratulation from naval officers who had attended the Middleton school at Centerville, Md., in their boyhood and there learned the three Rs under the guidance of the recent bridegroom's parents, "Uncle Sam" and "Aunt Mary" Middleton, as they were affectionately called by their students. Mr. Alexander Middleton was an instructor in his parents' school for a time and is now on the faculty of St. Albans', the National Cathedral School for Boys in this city.

It was recalled at the reception for Miss Helen Keller held at the Mayflower last night that two members of Washington's Junior League, Miss Virginia Hunt and Miss Louise King, have been leaders in this work for the blind in Washington. Now many distinguished men and women are interested in the National Library for the Blind at 1126 Twenty-first street. Miss Hunt and Miss King were among the first to urge the study of Braille upon Washington debutantes as a definite way in which they could render service to the sightless.

A score of years and more ago, when the National Library for the Blind was formed under the aegis of the late Dr. William Holland Wilmer, United States Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida; Mr. Charles C. Glover, the former Vice President, Charles Curtis; Senator Thomas Gore and Miss Ellen Lorraine Dorsey, Thomas Nelson Page, author and former United States Ambassador to Italy, was the acknowledged leader of the movement. When the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson came to the White House she also took an interest in the work.

It was Miss Louise King and Miss Virginia Hunt, however, who began to work in Braille and encouraged their friends to do likewise during the World War, when the men who had given their eyes that democracy might live, began to return from the war zone. Miss Hunt took her Braille typewriter with her when she attended the National Service School, a camp where women learned the Red Cross arts and other war relief service. Soon Braille classes were the order of the day there. Many of the students, most of them daughters and women relatives of important officials and leaders in the World War, learned Braille writing easily. Thus the gospel of this new service to the sightless was passed on.

New Product Rudely Jolts Soap Shampoo

Preparation Removes Residue and Gives Life to the Hair.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

OUR FAITH in "just soap and water" as a shampoo was rigidly shaken yesterday. It seems that a large concern that specializes in hair tints, oils, shampoos and the like has a new product that does unbelievable things for—and to—the hair.

For instance—a young woman whose hair had been thoroughly washed only three or four days had a rinse with the new product, preliminary to another shampoo. And what happened then? Why, you should have seen the soapy residue that came from her hair. And all the while she'd thought it clean as could be!

That's what the product does. It absolutely removes all traces of the soap that insists on staying after a shampoo. It frees the hair of this, gives it life, brings out its natural color, makes it soft and lustrous as silk.

One beauty salon that you may depend on for up-to-date methods uses this rinse now. Just call for it after your shampoo. It's a very wise thing to do. When this is used on your hair you know positively that your hair and scalp both are absolutely clean and free from any matter that could positively cause trouble—hair falling, itching scalp, etc. And what's more you'll feel—and look—as though you had a brand new head of hair.

Are Your Walls Washable?

THOSE of you who take your spring house-cleaning seriously are going to wish your wallpaper was washable before you're well under way.

Few things give a room such a musty, mouldy and moth-eaten appearance as dingy, dirty wallpaper. And yet, who can keep walls as clean as they'd like? Or prevent the sun from fading panels?

The real answer lies in the guaranteed washable and sunproof paper sold by a local shop. It's positively lovely paper, and with a beauty that will last. Don't wait—ask about it RIGHT NOW.

Dread Hat Shopping.

LOTS OF WOMEN dread the prospect of selecting a new spring hat. "I'd as soon brave a lion's den," said one. "I'd rather," said another.

And it is tiring, shopping here, there and yon, trying on hat after hat, finding the one you like costs too much, finding another too small, another too large, not one in just the right shade and precious few that flatter—as the right hat always should!

If you, too, are dreading this hat ordeal, may we make a suggestion? On your tour of inspection why not stop at a certain Connecticut avenue shop where there's a hat sale in full swing. Here you'll find them ranging from $3.95 to $7.50. Hats by the dozens, in all sizes, all colors, all shapes—felts, silks and straws.

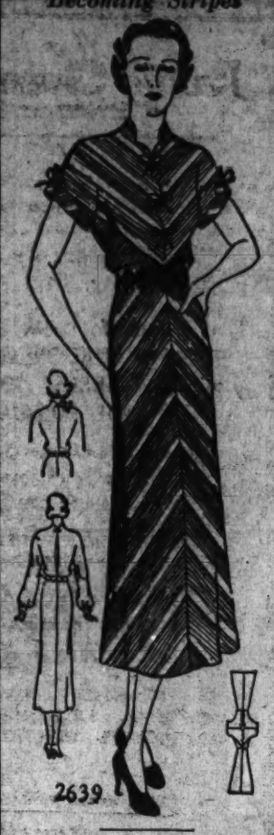
Becoming Stripes



Silk Stripes On Diagonal Feature Dress

By Laura I. Baldt, A. M.,

DIAGONAL stripes in print silk lead the way to chic in this easy casual day dress. Tie ribbons fasten the bodice and the cuffs of the short sleeves. It's so simple to sew. The waist cuts in one with the sleeves. It will repay you for your effort. It only takes 3¼ yards of 39-inch material for the 16-year size. Striped, checked or plaided cotton would be very effective for summer. Of course, in plain materials, it's also fascinating.

Style No. 2639 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust. Send ten cents (10c) (coin is preferred) for pattern. Write plainly your name, address and style number. New spring fashion book costs 10 cents. Send for your copy today. Address order to The Washington Post Pattern Department, 160 Fifth avenue, New York, N. Y.

Women's City Club Party Set Tonight

Mr. and Mrs. George Mathews, of London, England and New York, will be guests of honor at the leap year party tonight, opening the hospitality week festivities of the Women's City Club. The function, to be held at the clubhouse, will be the first of a series being planned before April 1.

Honorary chairmen for the occasion are Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Gilbert Grosevenor, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson. Mrs. Laura Waters, chairman of the party, and her committees will act as hostesses.

There will be a musical program directed by R. B. Levitt.

Among those invited are Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Lewis, Mr. John Waters, Mr. John Bennett, Mr. Stuart Bradley Wright, Mr. E. T. Leonard, Judge and Mrs. Schultz, Judge and Mrs. Mattingly, Maj. and Mrs. E. W. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sullivan, Miss Helen Nusbaum, Mrs. Henrietta Hickerson, Mrs. Jule Dumm, Mrs. Susie Green Bradley and Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Ryan.

Symphony Ends Season April 5

Concert on Thursday Afternoon to Feature Many Request Numbers.

The National Symphony Orchestra's last Thursday concert of the season will take place Thursday, at 4:45 p. m.

Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor, will include in the program works for which he has had numerous requests. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Mozart's serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" will be program features, together with works by Bach, Satie-Debussy and Weinberger.

While this will be the last Thursday concert, there will be one more Sunday concert before the orchestra disbands for the summer. This program, which will be Dr. Kindler's annual request program, will be held April 15.

The Layman's music course, founded in 1933, is one of the many educational developments resulting from the presence of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington. Its seven original sponsors were Mrs. Duncan Phillips, Mrs. Edwin E. Parker, Mrs. David A. Pierre Gaillard, Mrs. Tracy Dows, Mrs. Charles F. Baker, Mrs. William A. Borden and Miss Grace Dunham Guest.

Miss Harriet Johnson, of New York, a protege of Olga Samaroff, founder of the Layman's courses in the United States, gives an illustrated lecture preparing her audience to enjoy programs of symphonic music. Miss Johnson's course for the current year has included such subjects as Sonata Form, Romanticism, the Symphonic Poem, chamber music of Brahms, Instrumental Wagner and the conecrto and impressionism in music.

Among the members of the class are: Mrs. Robert S. Brookings, Mrs. Edward Burling, Mrs. John W. Davidge, Mrs. Henry P. Irvin, Mrs. George Peek, Mrs. William Phillips, Mrs. Adolph Miller, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., Mrs. Swager Sherley, Mrs. Frank Simonds, Mrs. Harlan Fisk Stone, Mrs. Benjamin Thoron, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Frank West and Mrs. Fred H. Brooke.

Fourth Concert Held.

Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, 2001-24th street, opened her home yesterday afternoon for the fourth in a series of concerts by the Washington String Quartet.

Cornell Students to Be Honored At Events Prior to Play Here

Day's Program, Including Luncheon, Sightseeing Tour and Dinner, Arranged for Undergraduates, Who Will Present Musical Production April 1.

Luncheon at noon, a sightseeing tour in the afternoon and a dinner at night are on the day's program for the 60 members of the Cornell Musical Clubs who will present "Oh, What a Night," a musical play, at the Mayflower Hotel April 1. Mrs. Roosevelt will head the list of patronesses, it has been announced by Mr. Walter C. Distler, president of the Cornell Club of Washington, which is sponsoring the production.

The undergraduate musicians will be greeted by a committee of alumni and their wives. Mr. Distler will preside at a luncheon for them at the Mayflower, after which they will be taken on a tour of Washington and later entertained at dinner at the Mayflower with men and women graduates as their hosts. Part of the program has been arranged by Mrs. Grace Savage, president of the Cornell Women's Club.

Mr. Eric Dudley, professional director of the glee club, and Mr. George L. Coleman, professional director of the instrumental group, will be among the guests. Responses on behalf of the undergraduates will be given by Mr. Paul Mattice, student leader of the glee club; Mr. Samuel Shannan, of the instrumentalists, and Mr. Jacob S. Fassett 3d, student manager.

Mrs. Clopton, Daughter, Return From New York

Mrs. Hoggatt Clopton, and her daughter, Mrs. Heloise Marshall Webb, have returned to their apartment at the Shoreham, after a motor trip to New York, with their friends from Los Angeles, Mrs. Tracy Abbott and her daughter, Mrs. Harry Ochs, who stopped in Washington en route from Florida to New York.

Mrs. Webb entertained at a dinner and cocktail party for Mrs. Ochs during the visitors' stay in Washington. Other guests included Mrs. Forrester H. Scott, of Philadelphia, and Count de Castellaine.

HEINZ SOUPS

Consider our shelves your headquarters for Heinz Soups . . . we have your favorite variety . . . 20 different kinds (in most stores). Heinz Soups permit you to serve the real "homemade" kind without the "home-work." As a guide we list below the complete list from which you can choose your favorite.

HEINZ CREAM of MUSHROOM A homemade style, heavy cream, Mushroom Soup—tasty and appealing—a tempting addition to any lunch or dinner—new and different. Contains no meat stock.

HEINZ CREAM of CELERY A delicious soup. Selected white celery, cooked and strained, enriched with sweet cream, delicately seasoned. Distinctive in flavor. Contains no meat stock.

HEINZ CREAM of SPINACH Made of garden fresh spinach and thickened with pure, sweet cream. You will rave over this outstanding creation. Guaranteed to appeal to the most exacting tastes. No meat stock.

HEINZ CREAM of ASPARAGUS Made from fresh, tender stalks of asparagus, enriched with pure, sweet cream. A distinctive flavor that appeals to all. Contains no meat stock.

HEINZ CORN CHOWDER This product is just what its name signifies—it possesses all of the characteristics of chowder and derives its flavor from the fine, sweet corn used in its preparation. It is strictly a vegetarian product, as are all Heinz Cream Soups.

HEINZ BEEF BROTH A thick soup, of choice beef, barley, and vegetables—delicious flavor—temptingly seasoned—instantly approved by epicures. Men, particularly, like this soup—want it often.

HEINZ MOCK TURTLE An outstanding soup—thick—full of nutriment. Preferred by men for its wholesomeness. Prepared of choice meat, boiled eggs, a dash of sherry, aromatic herbs, and a lemon tang.

HEINZ CHICKEN NOODLE SOUP A real favorite—will satisfy the most discriminating—tender, thin-cut noodles in rich chicken broth, deliciously flavored. Everybody likes it.

HEINZ ONION SOUP A clear French style soup of beef broth and fine cut sauteed onions. Delicious plain or served au gratin.

HEINZ PEPPER POT A soup with an early American background. A thick, meaty soup, blended with choice vegetables and bits of macaroni. Made "pepper-hot" in addition to other savory spices—delicious.

HEINZ BEAN SOUP A heavy puree of navy beans, seasoned with spices and bits of smoked ham. You will be pleasantly surprised when you try it. Delightfully different!

HEINZ CHICKEN GUMBO (creole) A thick soup of clear broth, with an abundance of rice, okra and flavored vegetables. A Southern favorite. Makes a tantalizing dish.

HEINZ VEGETABLE SOUP Made of selected beef stock and 13 choice vegetables. Very rich. Not a condensed soup but, like all Heinz soups, "ready to serve" just as it comes from the can.

HEINZ CONSOMME A clear beef broth. Will jell in the tin when properly chilled.

HEINZ GENUINE TURTLE SOUP This new Heinz creation is a thick soup with all the essential characteristics of Turtle Soup made by the finest chefs. You will find bits of turtle meat, chopped eggs and parsley apparent, and a flavor that is truly distinctive.

HEINZ SCOTCH BROTH Old fashioned Scotch barley broth with vegetables.

HEINZ CREAM of OYSTER SOUP A thick, creamy, full flavored oyster soup. Not a stew—a bisque of the finest fresh oysters, temptingly seasoned. Can be enjoyed in or out of oyster season—a favorite.

Gelatin Salad Recipe Winners Are Announced

Interesting Ideas for Using Leftover Vegetables Are Given.

MANY new and interesting ideas for utilizing leftover vegetables were disclosed in The Post contest last week for gelatin salad recipes.

Most of the prize-winning recipes are substantial ones and contain a great deal of food value as well as the necessary vitamins and minerals of a salad. Served with a soup or sandwiches and a drink, they would form an ideal lunch or supper. Or they could be used as the main salad.

Prizes are awarded to Mrs. S. C. Pfiler, 3828 Van Ness street northwest; Miss Karle Bundy, Leesburg, Va.; Ida Mae Ellerbe, 1601 Thirty-eighth street; Mrs. Arthur F. Brown, 2713 Wilson Boulevard, Clarendon, Va.; Mrs. R. G. Ewell, 113 Chestnut street, Takoma Park, Md., and Mary L. Ireland, 719 Third street northeast.

Try these new salads on your menu sometime this week and see if your family doesn't voice instant approval.

Tomato and Cheese Aspic Ribbon Salad.

Tomato Mixture.

1 quart tomatoes
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon powdered nutmeg
1 teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon ginger
1 small onion
⅛ teaspoon pepper
4 tablespoons sugar
2½ tablespoons gelatin
½ cup cold water

Mix water and lemon juice together, then stir in the gelatin. Cook tomatoes, onions, and seasonings together for five minutes. Strain and add gelatin mixture.

Cheese Mixture.

2 tablespoons gelatin) Blend
¼ cup warm water) together
1 pint cream cheese
1 tablespoon salt
2 tablespoons chopped pimento
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper

Enough heavy cream to make a quart

Blend the softened gelatin to the cheese. Add other ingredients and mix thoroughly. Put a layer of the tomato mixture, then a layer of the cheese and top with tomato mixture.

Chill and serve in slices on lettuce.

Gelatin Salad.

A combination of green peppers, hard-boiled eggs and your favorite gelatin make a delicious spring salad. The recipe calls for three green peppers, three hard-boiled eggs and lemon gelatin. You can substitute your favorite gelatin for the one mentioned above.

In making, you put the hard-boiled eggs in the center of the scooped-out green pepper. This is molded by filling in the space between the egg and the pepper "cup" with the gelatin. Place in the refrigerator to congeal. When the gelatin is firm and hard slice and place on a crisp lettuce leaf and serve with mayonnaise. This will make nine servings, as each pepper can be cut into three slices.

Jellied Pickle Ring.

1 envelope gelatin
1 pint cold water
1 cup vinegar
2 cups granulated sugar
10 whole cloves
1 cup chopped walnuts
1 10-oz. jar small sweet cucumber pickles

Soak the gelatin in the cold water. Boil vinegar, sugar and cloves together until they will form a thread. Strain, add nuts, gelatin and thinly sliced pickles. Pour into ring mold and chill, stirring occasionally.

Serve with finely shredded cabbage and mayonnaise in center as an accompaniment to cold sliced meat for the buffet supper.

Surprise Salad.

1 package lemon gelatine
1½ cups water
½ cup beet juice (water the beets were cooked in)
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup shredded or chopped cabbage
1 cup shredded or chopped celery
1 cup chopped nuts.
1 cup shredded or chopped beets
1 tablespoon vinegar

Scrub 3 beets well and cook in the usual way. When done save ½ cup of the water they were cooked in, then peel the beets and chop.

Dissolve the gelatin in 1½ cups of hot water. Add the beet juice, vinegar and salt. Chill until thickened and add the cabbage, celery, beets and nuts. This salad has the color of the beets and fits beautifully with color schemes. When chilled and ready to serve, use mayonnaise thinned with cream.

Southern Delight.

1 package lime prepared gelatin
1 pint hot water
1 package Philadelphia cream cheese
Nuts if desired (about ½ cup cut fine)

Pour hot water over gelatin. Partially cool. Mix thoroughly the cheese into the dissolved gelatin. When blended together, strain into a mold and put in the refrigerator till firm. Serve with whipped cream or mayonnaise on a bed of lettuce. This is a cool looking salad and can be used with various garnishes to carry out a color scheme. Nuts can be added to the salad or used in the garnish.

This is especially attractive served from individual molds and topped by a green or red cherry garnish.

Baltimore Crabmeat Mould.

1 tablespoon plain gelatin
¼ cup cold water
¾ cup mayonnaise
1 cup flaked crabmeat
½ cup minced celery
2 tablespoons minced parsley
½ cup chopped cucumber
2 tablespoons minced stuffed olives
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon paprika
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Few grains cayenne
Lettuce
Watercress

Soften the gelatin in the cold water; melt over steam; and add to the mayonnaise. Combine with the remaining ingredients and transfer to a ring mould rinsed with cold water. Chill in the refrigerator until firm; unmould and fill the center with lettuce hearts and sprigs of cress. Garnish with cut lemon dusted with paprika.

Lamb Takes the Lead for Spring

The essence of spring fairly radiates from this crown roast of lamb, which forms the base for your special spring dinner. The mint stuffing and garnishings of sliced tomatoes, watercress and carrots add the essential acid to blend with the meat and make the flavor more delicious.

Roast Crown of Lamb Excellent Spring Dish

By Betty Lou Massingale.

NOW THAT spring is here and Easter is looming in the near future, the special spring dinner, preceding a Sunday afternoon drive, demands attention.

If soemthing out of the ordinary is desired—something typical of warmer weather and the zest of spring—the crown roast of lamb is an excellent choice. It is made from the double rack of lamb with the rib bones pointing up in the shape of a crown.

An ideal menu for your special spring dinner is given below. It is planned to avoid that heavy after-dinner feeling which results from rich winter foods.

MENU

Fruit Cup
Crown Roast of Lamb
Mint or Watercress Stuffing
Creamed Peas and New Potatoes
Fresh Buttered Asparagus
Tossed Green Salad
Whole Wheat Rolls Butter
Celery Hearts Olives
Fresh Strawberry Mouse
Wafers Coffee

The crown of lamb is cooked by roasting. If the crown is filled with a dressing, as pictured above, the roast should be placed right side up on a rack in an open roasting pan. In this case it is necessary to wrap the ends of the rib-bones with salt pork or bacon in order to prevent charring. Place it in a moderate oven (350 F.) and roast until done, two and a half to three hours. Rib bones may be wrapped with paper frills if desired.

If the crown is not filled during cooking it may be turned up-side-down. In this case the rib ends need not be wrapped with bacon or salt pork for, as the fat melts and runs down, it will keep them moist.

Mint or Watercrest Stuffing.

2 cups fine dry bread crumbs
½ cup fresh mint leaves or
1½ cups finely cut watercress
3 tablespoons chopped celery
4 tablespoons butter
1½ tablespoons chopped onion
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Melt half the butter in a skillet and add the onion and celery.

Cook for two minutes, then add the finely cut mint or watercress and the other seasonings. If using watercress, allow the liquid which cooks out to evaporate. Then scoop this mixture to one side of the skillet and in the empty part melt the remaining butter and stir in the bread crumbs. When they have absorbed the butter mix all ingredients together.

In case the watercress stuffing is used, plan to have a dish of mint jelly, sharp marmalade or spiced fruit on the table as it needs some acid served with it for a better flavor.

Pineapple Adds Favor.

There is another favorite way to serve crown roast of lamb. Fill with dressing before roasting. Serve garnished with sauted pineapple slices, candied sweet potatoes and broiled slices of bacon. Minted pears or cubes of mint jelly may be substituted for the pineapple slices.

When serving, cut each chop separately.

It is well to note that the "muttonny" flavor, which is considered objectionable, is chiefly due to the outside fat. This should be removed before the mutton is cooked. The flavor may be rendered less noticeable also by rubbing the meat with lemon juice.

It is an old English custom to include fresh peas when serving roast lamb, and as spring progresses the price of this vegetable is automatically lowered. In cooking them with new potatoes, don't make the mistake of overcooking them, and be sure that they are as fresh as possible. Garnish with sprigs of parsley.

The fresh buttered asparagus may be substituted by buttered onions, broiled tomato halves, cauliflower, or whole green beans broiled with strips of bacon encircling a half dozen or more long beans. This vegetable is strictly a matter of choice.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE YOUNG lady daughter of this family has always been a harum scarum who never wanted to do anything but run around. Now all of a sudden she's grown so dainty and demure and interested in the family and all agog about fixing up her own room. In short she has graduated from the teens to the twenties with high honors. And don't think her mother and father aren't proud! So proud in fact, that the old man himself hasn't grumbled a single grumble over the money she's been spending on her room.

It's really darling . . . she has had the walls done in the loveliest robin's egg blue and selected a carpet that is a rather light pinky gray in an all-over two-tone design—very graceful. And guess what she got for curtains and bedspread—one of those riotous flowered dress crepes, splashy bright water-color shades on a white ground. She made herself a comforter out of this same material, using blue to tie it with. The dressing table skirt is of water-color pink organdy ruffles made very full and accented with little bow knots of narrow black velvet ribbon. A pair of small chairs she had covered in water-color pink chintz with those same little black bows around the flounce.

For the wall, she collected miniatures and silhouettes in attractive frames, then added gilt-based lamps.

Send a stamp for Miss Boykin's bulletin, "Bedroom Window Ideas for Spring" . . . it has suggestions for attractive curtain arrangements.

Selfishness For One's Child Common Trait

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

MRS. SMITH could see no point of view but her children's. If there was trouble at school the other child must be in the wrong. If a fight started on the playground it was never the fault of the Smiths, but of the other children.

When it came time for parties and dancing class, her children were the ones to be considered. Her daughters must have partners for every dance, and must enjoy themselves even if all the other girls were bored and neglected, and her sons had no duty but to dance with the prettiest girls, though good manners required that they show some courtesy to other girls.

Selfishness for one's children is another form of personal selfishness. Mrs. Smith could not regard her children objectively. They were a part of herself, and any injury to them was an injury to herself. If they were in the wrong, it meant that she was in the wrong; if they were neglected or bored, she herself felt the slight. She became so unpopular among her children's contemporaries that eventually her children were disliked because they were her children.

Justice and fair play are an asset to any parent. Children have more respect for their own fathers and mothers if they feel that they are impartial, than if the parents constantly take the possessive attitude, "It's mine, so it is perfect."

In bringing up children it is always a shortsighted policy to forget the rights and comforts of other people's children.

MARY HAWORTH Says:

Letters Which Make Up Today's Column Are for the Most Part Self-Explanatory; Two Offer Advice and Encouragement to Other Correspondent; Third Asks Help.

COLUMNIST'S NOTE: Letters which have been chosen to make up today's column are for the most part self-explanatory. Two offer advice and encouragement to other correspondents, and a third asks for help for a victim of cruel circumstances. They are herewith presented without further comment. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The advice you gave "Worried" in your column, March 18, was of much interest to me. You see, the same thing happened to me just a few months ago. I would like to tell Miss Worried that the thing you advised her to do is just the right thing—and I should know better than anyone else.

Mary Haworth

I am a man 27 years old and went with a girl several years younger for nearly four years. I loved her very much, or thought I did, and wanted very much to marry her. We went to many of the big football games and, with her mother as chaperone, took many trips together. I have a good job and wanted to settle down and have my own home and family. She admitted she liked me very much and enjoyed going around with me, but said she didn't love me. But I wouldn't give up hope that I would one day win her love.

• • • •

Well, one day she sent me a letter telling me it was no use for us to keep on seeing each other any longer; that she could never love me, and that we were just wasting each other's time. She said she wanted to marry, too, one day; that she wished me happiness and the best of luck always, and hoped we would always be friends.

• • • •

I don't mind telling you that letter hurt me very much. But after a few months I am able to realize it was best for me and I have actually written to thank her for sending it. Now, although I have not yet found the right girl for me, I am much more contented and happier than I have been for a long time—and we are still friends.

• • • •

I am sure "Worried's" man friend will be equally grateful to her in time if she will only tell him in the right way that she doesn't love him enough to marry him, in spite of his great kindness to her. Once the break is made neither of them will be sorry it has happened. May you keep up the good work you have been doing. Sincerely, M. S. F.

Reader Urges "B. F. B." to Follow Advice Given.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My attention was held by the letter from "B. F. B." in your column March 16, in which she told of her secret marriage a year and a half ago to a professional man who insists she go on keeping the marriage secret in order to hold her job and support him. I just want to say to her that if she has the courage to follow your advice, I am sure she will find happiness. You helped me to solve my great problem. A. A. M.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some months ago a very dear member of my family was injured and spent several months before her death in a Washington hospital. During this time I became acquainted with a very nice and deserving little woman, who has spent the greater part of the last six years in the same hospital. She was injured by a drunken automobile driver and left for dead on the street. The entire staff of the hospital has been tireless in efforts to bring about her recovery and now it is hoped she will soon be about again on crutches.

• • • •

My problem is this: I am seeking to find for her a one-room unfurnished apartment on the first floor, near or adjoining bath, and near the bus or car line; something not expensive, as she has no means of support until she completes a business course. Friends will take care of her expenses until she is in a position to assume them. She will require no waiting on, as she is an independent and capable person.

• • • •

I sincerely trust you will find space for this appeal and should anyone wish to communicate with me, they may call ATlantic 5604. Very respectfully, MRS. H. W. FORTUNE.

French Styles To Be Shown At Jelleff's

By Frances Mangum.

EACH SEASON we read the glowing descriptions of the costumes originated by Parisian designers. This spring we see them with our very own eyes.

They have been brought directly from the French capital by the stylist, Miss Elleby Wood, of Elleby Wood, Inc., and are to be shown in moving pictures today in the Little Theater at Frank R. Jelleff's.

Since many of these gowns have been judged too extreme and bizarre to suit the American woman, other dresses have been modeled from them and "Americanized." The American models will be shown together with the moving pictures of the French originals.

A variety of influences, both political and artistic, are expressed in these Parisian costumes. You will probably note that:

Those by Bruyere, Molyneaux and Vionnet that show Chinese reflections are outstanding. Vionnet's charming colors and belts and accessories—Bruyere's silhouettes in gowns and millinery—Molyneux's straight tunics all bespeak the Chinese trend.

Waistlines Are Higher.

The directoire period lives again in higher waistlines and straighter skirts as seen in some of Schiaparelli's coats, suits and evening clothes.

This expression is also found in the gowns by Rochas, Ardanse and Mainbocher.

The Flemish art exhibit in Paris at the moment has given forth much in colorful designs, in prints and contrasting colors. Its influence is also shown in shorter full skirts and fuller sleeves.

Margot, the play of the Henry III epoch, is reflected in high or wide shoulders and long full skirts of robe de style type—important sleeves, pepping petticoats, ruches and furbelows.

The Spanish exposition of the modern Spanish painters at the Tuilleries in Paris has cast its influence in a lovely manner on the feminine fashion world as in Molyneux's bolero suits, Susy's matador hats and the abundant use of flowers.

Tunics Over Long Skirts.

Degas, the French painter, famed for his ballet scenes and now exhibiting in Paris, has inspired Mainbocher, Maggy Rouff and others in ballet skirts or full tunics over longer straight skirts.

The Tricentennial in the Antilles or the Martinique Islands has left its imprint particularly in hats, as the scarf-draped hats, or bandana turbans by Mme. Agnes and also Bruyere.

Miss Wood, who has a remarkable facility for selecting the key dresses of each collection, brings back the originals from Paris to this country, where they remain for 30 days. During that time they are rented to manufacturers to be copied. At the end of a month they are sold.

Straight From Gay Paree

Drawing by Valentine.

Women Past 40 In Van of Sex, Writer Asserts

U. S. Middle-Aged Prove Life Can Begin Even as Grandmothers.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

OFF THE SHELF AND OUT OF chimney corners, middle-aged American women have come out into the world, renewing old interests and making new ones. Thus they have conquered the complex of increasing years, have proved life can begin even after children are reared and married and have children of their own.

That, at least, is the way American women who have passed their youth have impressed the Countess of Listowel on her first trip to this country. A political writer for a Hungarian daily newspaper and the wife of the Earl of Listowel of Ireland, she is here on a lecture tour. Yesterday afternoon, she was guest of honor at a tea given by Mrs. Raymond Gram Swing at the headquarters of National Woman's Party.

Earlier in the day at the Dodge Hotel, she told of her impressions of American women and compared their positions in public life to that of women in Europe.

Lecturer, Traveler.

Lady Listowel's impressions of women and their ways in America are not superficially drawn. In this country since January 15, she has traveled from coast to coast, has lectured before numerous groups and has met and talked with representative women throughout the country.

"From what I have observed, middle-aged American women are marvelous! So different from what I expected," she said. "So smartly dressed, so alert and so eager to make a new life for themselves. When I look back to my childhood days, I think of my mother and grandmother, and remember how the years were so indelibly traced on their faces and in all their actions and attitudes. I feel American women past 40 have found the fountain of youth!"

She has been much more favorably impressed with mothers than with their daughters, she said. "I have talked with numbers of girls in college since I have been here," she said, "and I have been amazed at their indifference, their lack of knowledge of national and international affairs. Apparently most of them are letting the world slip by them; they seem, in fact, to be drifting along without purpose, without any well-defined plan for preserving the place in public life women have so far won for themselves."

Club Women Praised.

Lady Listowel also mentioned that the most maligned, much satirized and criticized club woman of this country deserves more favorable "publicity" than she has been accorded abroad. "I have found organized women here are extremely well informed, energetic and enthusiastic."

Handing further verbal palms to the zest and charm of American women past their prime, she said without exception she had found them to be courteous and hospitable. "Also; I have observed they are generally successful in what they set out to do, whether their interests are centered around the home or in a career in public life."

Progress in Germany.

"Everyone knows what has happened to women in Germany," she said, "but what many persons have not yet discovered is that German leaders are beginning to make concessions to women."

Women of France, she said, though still deprived of suffrage, "are making tremendous strides in the economic world. Seven million of them are now employed outside the home.

Native of Hungary.

In her native Hungary the woman's movement has never been strong and few women have been active in public life. She, in fact, is the first feminine journalist of that country. A member of a family in which the men have long been prominent in diplomatic and government circles, she heard national and international affairs discussed so often in her home, she made up her mind to be a political writer.

"But when I told my parents of this ambition, they were both astonished and disappointed," she said, her blue eyes shining. "My mind was made up, however. So much to the chagrin of my father, I finally got a job on a newspaper. Later, when I went to England to attend the London School of Economics, I continued to write for the Hungarian journal. I still do."

Shortly after she was graduated from the school of economics, she married the Earl of Listowel, a philosopher and an authority on politics. Her husband, also a lecturer, accompanied her to America. Their daughter is in England.

TWO ON SAFARI

By George Agnew Chamberlain

Chapter XXXI.

Again, Ibn-ben-Dur.

HE TURNED AWAY with a sense of relief and ordered Tugo to take up Swayback's spoor. For a time the going was as fast as they cared to make it, but the small party had covered only a few miles when it came face to face with Matogada's advance guard. A moment later Ballard was talking to the old chief, telling him of the death of Smith-Brandon. As soon as the word spread the entire column began to break up into individual punitive expeditions, intent upon exterminating the dead man's quondam wives and all their relations. Ballard asked how far ahead was Josephine. To his amazement nobody had seen her or Bongo, but Abdul had been picked up. At mention of his name he came sheepishly forward.

"Did you see the missis?"

"Yes, master, I see missis and Bongo."

"Why didn't you follow them?"

"I follow, I follow plenty! They go too fast," asserted Abdul and then wailed in an aggrieved tone. "I sleep in bush!"

Realizing the terror which that last statement implied, Ballard softened. "Which way were they going?"

"Road to Wemba."

Ballard scowled, wondering how a whole impi could have missed seeing the girl on horseback. "Why didn't you keep after her this morning? Why did you turn back?"

Abdul gave hi a withering look. "No spoor this morning."

"That's so," admitted Ballard. "Matogada's outfit would have wiped it out."

He pressed on down the broad trail in the direction Josephine had last been going. Tugo had a definite theory as to what had happened. Not troubling to look for spoor he advanced at full speed for hours, making straight for a tiny path leading off to water on the left. There he stopped, grinned and pointed with his assagai at horse tracks, going in and coming out.

Advance Is Halted.

The reading was clear. The thirsty horse had turned off for water, Bongo had followed, the Missis had come back first, heard Matogada's oncoming people, hidden her horse, stood behind two huge euphorbias and watched them pass. At this point, Ali interpreting, Ballard interjected a sharp inquiry as to the whereabouts of Bongo. Tugo grinned. Bongo had stayed behind at the waterhole to gather grass. That information imparted, the master tracker took up the fresh spoor, now quite clear, and followed it to a point where the fugitive had encamped.

Scarcely stopping to read that simple story, they continued for weary hours until Ballard could scarcely drag one foot after the other. The moment he realized the spoor was becoming illegible he called a halt.

Building a single fire and dividing what cooked food they had in equal parts, they cast themselves down like logs. They started on as soon as light broke, each persuaded the ordeal of the last few days would soon be over. Consequently it was with consternation they recognized the little side trail by which they had issued from Wemba and realized Josephine's spoor kept straight on.

The same question occurred to all of them. If she had not been heading for Wemba, what was her destination? How far might they have to slog after her? Without food or water, how long could they stand it? Ballard, after due consideration, sent Ali, Negrito and the water-carrier into Wemba to organize a relief expedition and permitted the exhausted Abdul to accompany them. He and Tugo remained on the spoor.

Their spirits low, they traveled more and more slowly and Ballard was searching for a spot of shade where they could take a much needed noontime rest when they chanced on a first item of interest—the track of an ox cart where it turned out of, not into, their own trail. They were traveling due south; it had been coming from the south and at this point had turned west on the road to Mutambe's country.

Invigorated by the discovery they continued to the point where Josephine and ox cart had met. They saw where both had stopped, where she had turned back, where Swayback had stood at the tailboard for several minutes, but to their great dismay they also perceived the horse had then headed south again at a canter. Ballard was all for giving up, shade or no shade, until the relief column from Wemba, equipped with all the comforts of life, should arrive. He sat down, locked his arms around his knees, covered as much of himself as possible with his hat and tried to doze.

Mystery Develops.

But Tugo, his black face puzzled, wandered off pensively on the trail of the cantering horse. He followed it for half a mile, stopped short, then followed it again, stopped once more, turned and hurried back to try to tell Ballard what he had read.

Here was mystery with a vengeance; Swayback and Bongo had gone on, Josephine, according to Tugo, had not. How could the tracker tell? Ballard examined the ground carefully on his own hook and found no woman's footstep, consequently, if Tugo were right—and he had never gone wrong yet in reading a story—she had passed directly from horse to ox cart and that was an action she could have performed only willingly.

Then there was no need for haste on his part. Sitting down, he resumed his pose, but instead of trying to sleep, his mind busied itself with trying to unravel this latest knot until, at last, Ali appeared. Justifying his reputation as a master head boy he had taken no chances of forgetting one of the many items specified by Ballard and was followed by the entire safari.

"Good boy," commented Mallory and ordered Jocko to prepare a quick meal at once then he turned to Ali. "Find out everything Tugo has been trying to tell m-e."

It was some minutes before Ali was ready with his report and Ballard was at table before the Swahili began: "Tugo say Missis get into cart from horse. Horse stand, Bongo eat with ox boys. Horse go on. Soon Bongo go too."

"I got all that," said Ballard impatiently, "How does he know Missis not go on?"

"Somebody beat Swayback very bad. Horse step too heavy for Missis. Not same spoor like when Missis ride."

Ballard frowned, only half believing. "Does anybody know whose cart it was?" he asked at a venture.

Ali smiled. "Everybody know ox spoor for Ibn-ben-Dur, big banian man."

Ballard sprang to his feet so suddenly he knocked over the table before him. Ibn-ben-Dur! From that start his thoughts began to race, leaping from point to point. The supplies he had ordered for delivery at Wemba—for some reason the oily old fox had decided to deliver them in person. Through the front flaps of his canopied cart he must have had ample opportunity to observe Josephine's approach. To the banian mind, since she was alone, her overlord must infallibly be dead.

Ibn-ben-Dur Plots.

Only one other solution could possibly have occurred to Ibn—that she had run away. In either case she was free booty to any pirate and he had laid his plans accordingly: rid himself of Bongo and changed his own direction from populous Wemba toward Mutambe's isolated village where he could concoct and carry out his schemes in relative security.

He was a merchant of great wealth, an almost legendary figure throughout a wide stretch of the hinterland. It would be quite within the limits of reason to believe Bongo might never open his mouth and that months would intervene before any authoritative search for Mallory or his companion should start.

"Tell Tugo we'll follow the ox cart until we catch up with it, if it takes all day and all night," Ballard ordered. "After dark, if the moon isn't big enough, you throw the flashlight for him."

Josephine Enraged.

Josephine had meant to kill Smith-Brandon; she would always regret having missed the easy shot. She had known and hated him all her life with that hatred a girl reserves for the first man to destroy illusion without setting up a substitute idol in its place. Her feeling upon having the rifle torn from her hands was plain rage, but almost on the instant her thoughts swerved to a new objective. Here was her chance. Let Ballard look out for himself; if he got stabbed in the back by as traitorous a hand as ever dealt a cowardly blow it would be his own fault.

It never entered her head she might not strike the back trail and manage alone a meeting with Matogada's forces; from what she remembered it would be like riding along a highway. She wheeled her horse and dashed back along the way they had come. Automatically Bongo started after her. Hearing the yells of his mates as they scattered in pursuit of plunder and the decamping litter-bearers he cast a longing look over his shoulder, then back at Josephine's disappearing figure.

He hesitated, but not for long. At the pace she was going it would take all his endurance to catch up with the galloping horse while daylight lasted. He set out at a dogged trot.

In rounding the copse Josephine might easily have lost her way, but she did not, and the moment she struck into the broad trail she slowed Swayback to the easy canter she knew he could keep up for miles. Soon she came upon Abdul, still gagging the mouth of the disconsolate black mother.

When Josephine burst into sight, riding at a gallop, naturally he concluded Mallory had been killed. Then, quickly enough, he made up his mind which way he wanted to go and her call to him to come on merely acted as a spur to his own inclination. He started after the horse, little knowing what he was letting himself in for.

Make-up and Boy Are Chief Topics For Girls, 17 to 20

New York, (AP).—Fashions in conversation were surveyed this week by Margery Wilson, a specialist on the subject of "charm."

Among her findings, she said, were these:

"The average girl of 17 to 20 can discuss only four subjects: make-up, movies, boys, and school.

"The average woman of 20 to 30 can converse intelligently on 15 subjects. Heading the list are home, clothes, family, marriage, love, beauty, and men.

"Conversational topics that have become more popular among both women and men in the last few years are aviation, air conditioning, diet, the next war, politics, modern art, and Shirley Temple."

Lively Circus Rushes Season At Shoreham

Elephants, Clowns, Acrobats Swarm the Ballroom; Other Night Spots Gay.

By Chanticleer.

Incredible as it may seem, the Shoreham puts on a real circus this week. Advance notices may have left you slightly cold about the prospects of a bona-fide circus in the ballroom of a swank hotel. Not only is this Will Hill show (billed as Hamid's Circus) the cream of the big tent acts, but it is an hour long and packed with fast-moving entertainment.

Will Hill's elephants are wonderful. Emil Pallenberg's bears do things I never saw done under the big top—although I understand the bears go direct to the country's leading circus this spring for the usual summer circus trek.

Then there's Pallenberg's Doberman Pinchers—dogs to you—in a precision routine that would make a line of dancing dollies ache with envy. I mean, they're really good! Then there's a pair of Japanese in one of those intriguing foot-juggling acts, with one member serving as a human ball for the other's foot work.

Clowns Complete Show.

And the clowns! No circus could be without clowns, and Hamid's happen to be Poodles and Noodles, in a rocking-table thriller; Aunt Jemima and her Pancakes, in a fast tumbling, slapstick opening, and plenty of interludes while the animals are being deployed to the ring.

How the Shoreham happened to hit on the happy idea of a circus for a dignified supper room is beside the point. It's a grand show, and I'll bet the meanest old meany will get a kick out of it. Jay Corbett, who is ballyhooing the circus, opines as how a 6-day bicycle race would be the smart move next. And I go along with Jay on that. I think a 6-day bike race in that big Shoreham dining room would be the greatest novelty the town's ever known.

Karavaeff As a Sailor.

Karavaeff is doing a sailor dance this week at the Russian Troika, one he did years ago in R-R-Russia. Karavaeff, you see, dropped in to see Fred Astaire's "Follow the Fleet," and it all came back to him. After privately polishing up on the routine he tried it out on one audience—and it's there to stay for awhile now. Gosh! Wonder what would happen if Karavaeff saw Sally Rand! . . . Sidney, the Mayflower maestro, is becoming a musical League of Nations. In one week he played for the Yugoslavian Legation, Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and the White Russian ball. He's a master of Greek, Egyptian and Swedish tunes—and recently undertook a request rendition of "I Love You" in Oriental style.

Spring at Maryland Club Gardens means more hustle and bustle than at Mrs. McGillicuddy's boarding house. Spring—that's when the Gardens turns to the outdoors—the swimming pool, big umbrellas, verandas and entertainment from the big platform across the pool. With moonlight and sweet music, and all that sort of thing.

Crazy Cutters Click.

That Crazy Cat Revue did so well at the Lotus that it's being held over this week, with Theodore and Wright, the Samet Sisters and Kay and Dean. July Ellington is visiting in Manhattan and Jean Utgard is doing a bit of substitution for the week. . . . They're expecting an increase of femme customers at the Mayfair this week, what with Roy Kiser doing the singing. Roy comes to the Mayfair after touring with Tommy Tucker and his ork, and is known to Shoreham patrons.

The Ambassador Hi-Hat has added Kitty Simons to its Paradise Islanders. She will be known as the Singing Cigarette Girl. Kitty has one of those big voices—when she wants to settle down on something like "Some of these Days"—but she does a sweet tune very neatly. She'll be heard at the cocktail hour and in the evenings. . . . Another candidate for the "best pianist" in the village comes up in the person of Charlie Bates, of the Club Volga Boatman. It seems Charlie is being campaigned as the best "show pianist"—that means, he knows his spinach at accompanying floor artists.

Illiana at Heigh-Ho.

The glamorous Illiana, now in her second week at Pete Macias' Club Heigh-Ho, has changed her repertoire and for the first time in the Heigh-Ho's history a "single" attraction is being held for a third week. But on April 4, so La Illiana's management reports, she goes to New York's Rainbow Room atop the Rockefeller Center. . . . Betty Cooper was the winner of the La Paree's regular Monday night amateur show. Next Monday the preliminary winners get together for the big show-down. DeRonda and Barry, ballroom team, head La Paree's floor show this week.

The Dude Ranch is one up this week on fan dances, meaning that the current attraction is a fan dance team, not a solo ostrich plume waver. All very colorful, with the fans made up of all the bright colors in the spectrum. The costumes, such as they are, were imported from Paris, although they do seem like such trifling things to send all the way to Paris for. And for your own dancing, Ralph Garron and his orchestra.

The Madrillon intended to have garden variety American entertainment this week, but when Lorraine and Carlos arrived, ah, there was the Spanish influence as usual—at least insofar as Carlos is concerned. He's a real Castilian, from Spain, if you will, although educated in New England. Lorraine is the goods in an American girl. She hails from Worcester, Mass. As a result, they do a bit of a bolero in their dance menu . . . Stone-Villa is calling your attention to the change in the weather and reminding you that for good food, stars and moonlight it deserves early consideration.

Appear on Night Club Floors This Week

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

NEARLY half of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's clerical employes in Washington are attending school after office hours, according to figures released by John Edgar Hoover, director.

BAKER.

Thus, with 336 of the 762 clerical employes registered for evening classes in the various local public and private schools, the F. B. I. takes the lead among all the Federal establishments in encouraging its workers to advance. This policy, Director Hoover finds, stimulates morale and ambition of the employes and promotes efficiency.

Law and branches of law—prelegal, review, graduate and business law—are the subjects being studied by 214 employes. Forty-nine are studying accounting and 38 business. Others are registered in courses covering practically the entire curriculum of a university from music to engineering.

Group Demands Resignation.

Charging that "continuance of E. C. Babcock in the office of president of the American Federation of Government Employes will hinder and handicap the organization in all of its future efforts to build up better standards of civil service personnel and employment conditions," Panama Canal Lodge (D. C.), No. 6, demands that Babcock resign.

The demand, taking the form of a resolution, charges specifically that Babcock aroused antagonism of prominent members of Congress and endangered the passage of the leave bills.

Babcock's only comment on the resolution last night was:

"I have no present intention of resigning."

Panama Canal Lodge is listed at the national A. F. G. E. headquarters as having 39 members. The total A. F. G. E. membership March 20 was reported at 22,371, divided among 295 lodges throughout America and Territories. The Panama unit was among the minority that opposed the re-election of Babcock at the Cincinnati convention. It has identified itself as conservative, particularly at the New York convention of 1934. However, last year at Cincinnati, these conservatives voted with the alleged left-wingers of the organization.

The "antagonism" on Capitol Hill is said to have arisen from differences between Babcock and Representative Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, that led to the latter's declining the organization's invitation to attend the Cincinnati convention. During this session of Congress relations between Ramspeck and Babcock and the National A. F. G. E. offices apparently have resumed a cordial vein. Ramspeck was guest speaker at the District Department's March meeting, which his wife and daughter also attended. Ramspeck, author of the leave bills referred to in the Panama resolution, also was guest speaker at the A. F. G. E. mass meeting during Civil Service week in January.

Promotions at city postoffice reported this month include: W. Gordon Bell, assistant superintendent of mails; Everett M. Pershing (F), foreman, office of superintendent of mails; David B. Albright, superintendent of Northeast station, and Morris B. Feimster, assistant superintendent of Connecticut avenue station.

New Act Explained.

Q. Can you tell me the objectives of the new soil conservation and domestic allotment act?—Allen T. Marks (P).

A. As recently outlined by Secretary Wallace, these are as follows:

1. A goal is set for 1936 that includes an increase of crop land devoted to soil-improving and soil-conserving crops from the 1930 level of 100,000,000 to 130,000,000 acres.

2. Production of quantities of food and fiber ample to supply domestic consumer needs.

3. Establishment of a soil-depleting "base acreage" for each farm on which application for payment is made.

4. Special soil-depleting base acreages are to be established for cotton, tobacco, peanuts, flaxseed, rice, sugar beets, and sugar cane.

5. Two types of payments are to be made to co-operating farmers: A soil conserving payment and a soil-building payment.

6. For purposes of payment, crops are classified as soil-depleting, soil-conserving, and soil-building.

7. Payments are to be divided between landlord and tenant where each shares in the crop or its proceeds.

8. Administration is to be through State committees, county and community committees, and the AAA.

9. Five regional divisions of the AAA are to have charge of administration in five major areas making up the United States.

10. Payment is to be made to the individual farmer after actual evidence is submitted that he has fulfilled the conditions of the grant and performance has been certified to by his county committees. There will be no contracts with farmers.

11. About $470,000,000 can be expended for soil conservation and soil building and for administration of the program locally and nationally.

On the Air Today

THE sponsors of the Louis-Baer fight evidently felt they got their money's worth because an airing of the coming Louis-Schmeling match has been announced by N. B. C. under the same sponsorship.

Exact date and scene are yet to be announced but it is expected the fisticuffs will be staged in one of the major league ball parks in New York City in June. No announcer has yet been signed for the broadcast.

As I recall, listeners were well pleased with the handling of the other scrap by Clem McCarthy and Hal Totten. It seems reasonable they will be used again.

Mike Jacobs, promoter of the bout, is certain of a big attendance. He has stated that "every fight fan in the country who is able to do so will attend the fight in person. But there will be millions who cannot, and it is of them I am thinking. A bout arousing such a high degree of public interest really becomes public property."

My colleague, Bill McCormick of the sports department, observes rather cynically that a broadcast fee of at least $20,000 helps encourage Mr. Jacobs in feeling the fight belongs to the country at large—via the air.

Tomorrow night's Spelling Match will be one of those old-fashioned affairs with jaw-breaking words. Teams will be composed of leading spellers in the Washington Spelling Society headed by E. C. Helm. To make sure the spellers know what words are being called, Mr. Helm will bring a pronouncer to the studio. "Pops" Charlie Stofberg, who conducts the weekly Post matches, took one look at the type of word necessary for such advanced spellers and said, "I don't even know what they mean, let alone trying to pronounce them." The Post Spelling Match is held weekly, WMAL, at 8:30.

"Curbstone Queries" yesterday offered its listeners five $1 prizes for questions submitted for use in The Post's daily quizz of passersby on E street. The first awards will be made next Saturday in the broadcast, WMAL, at 12:15.

Culbertson on Bridge

A Directed Opening Lead.

Blind obedience is repugnant to our spirit of Americanism, but it is the only road to follow in many hands at contract bridge. This is particularly true when one defender is in a position to determine the best line of defense, whereas the other can only guess. An elaborate and expressive system of bids and plays has been evolved from this fundamental truth. Signal cards from one of the devices, leads another. And there is a special class of bids designed solely to influence the play of the cards, rather than pointing to the proper contract. Certain cue bids have this function and certain penalty doubles. Today's hand is an illustration of the lead-directing double, and how the defenders met disaster because the opening leader refused to be guided.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 Diamond	Pass	1 Heart	Pass
2 Diamonds	Pass	2 No trump	Pass
3 Diamonds	Pass	3 No trump	Pass
Pass	Double	Redb.	[final bid]

South's redouble was too optimistic considering his previous strong bidding. He should have permitted his partner to decide whether a redouble was advisable. With only two queens in his hand, West made no effort to decipher what his partner's double meant (or perhaps he knew and was stubborn!) and smugly opened the "fourth best of his longest and strongest suit" (as though a Q 7 5 4 could be called a suit!). Declarer naturally allowed the lead to run to his hand and snared East's jack with his king. He then finessed against the queen of spades, dummy's ten holding the trick. The heart finesse lost to West's queen and now, too late, the diamond lead was made. Dummy's ace promptly went up and four rounds of hearts were rattled off. East discarded to the best of his ability on the last two rounds, a spade and a club. But he never could get West on lead for another play through dummy's diamond queen and when, after South led to the spade ace, a club was led from dummy, he was forced to concede the diamond queen for the declarer's ninth trick.

A reasonably experienced and not stubborn West could have saved the situation on his opening lead. East's double suggested a lead through dummy's only bid suit, unless West had a strong leadable suit of his own. Had East held the necessary high spades to make that opening a good one, he would have had a one spade overcall to the opening diamond bid. And, finally, East hardly could have a double without two stoppers in North's twice rebid suit.

Obviously, on an opening diamond lead, the declarer would have been in serious difficulties. West would have to get on lead again with his queen of hearts and would, of course, lead his second diamond. The defenders would win no less than one heart, two diamonds and two club tricks, for a penalty of 400 points.

Ways to Halt Auto Parking FraudStudied

By Howard F. Wentworth.

While police and traffic officials considered charges under which parking lot operators could be prosecuted for allegedly usurping street parking spaces after accepting storage fees from local motorists, new methods in so-called ticket "fixing" activities were revealed at police headquarters yesterday.

Washington's motoring public, it was charged, is resorting to false statements, foolish excuses and trickery in determined efforts to squash traffic charges. Investigation by Sergt. John Agnew, traffic division records chief, has disclosed repeated hoaxes by law-breaking drivers seeking to evade punishment, it was reported.

Day in and day out, Sergt. Agnew and his staff hear concocted excuses and varied reasons why a motorist's car was "ticketed" unjustly. Each case is carefully investigated and action is withheld until police are convinced of the driver's innocence.

Meanwhile, traffic division authorities are continuing their undercover inquiry into reputed illicit parking lot operations. Official reports are being compiled, showing instances where lot attendants accept storage fees and then park motorists' cars on public streets.

Procedure Undecided.

Attaches of the corporation counsel and District Attorney's offices are undecided as to what procedure should be followed in efforts to curb the alleged practice.

Although it is planned to bring a test case into police court, the legal controversy must first be settled, it was pointed out. Three charges under which parking lot operators might be arrested were advanced by court and police officials yesterday. They are:

Occupancy of public space for private purposes, unauthorized use of an automobile and obtaining money under false pretenses.

Thus far, however, parking violation charges are the only ones for which a lot operator has been arrested. A man giving his occupation as a manager was booked at police headquarters on an overtime parking count yesterday.

This man, police say, owns a downtown parking lot and posted collateral for a ticket placed on a patron's car. The car in question was moved from the lot and parked on the street after the driver had paid for parking privileges, police said.

According to court prosecutors, there is no existing law under which the parking lot operator can be forced to stop street parking practices. It is feared that any charges discussed so far will not hold in a court test case.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer also announced yesterday that a preliminary set of regulations and standard storage fees are being prepared with a view toward licensing all parking lots in the District. A draft of these plans will be submitted to the District license committee.

"Congressional Angle."

The Congressional angle has entered ticket "fixing reports by local motorists, Sergt. Agnew revealed yesterday. Frequently, he said, a ticket holder will appear at his office with a story of this kind:

"I am from Representative ——'s office. I received this ticket while on official business for the Congressman. want it taken care of."

"They just take a chance rather than pay $2 or $3," said Sergt Agnew.

Permit Is Revoked.

Edward P. Stafford, 1605 Allison street northwest, had his driving permit revoked for speeding 50 miles an hour. Temporary suspensions of from 15 to 45 days were meted to 24 other motorists after a meeting of the Board of Revocations.

Jack Lewis, 2311 I street northwest, had his permit suspended for 45 days for speeding 45 miles an hour. It was his second offense. Donald L. May, 2208 Wyoming avenue northwest, lost his operator's license for 45 days. He was speeding 40 miles an hour.

Thirty-day suspensions went to John J. Farlow, Baltimore, Md., 40 miles; Edward F. Gallesher, 3700 Massachusetts avenue northwest, 42 miles; Nathaniel J. Henderson, 147 7 street northwest, 40 miles; Thomas C. Lancaster, 6300 Thirty-third street northwest, 42 miles; Stanley Lawson, 2923 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, 36 miles, second offense; Bernard Marcuits, 1418 Ridge place southeast, 44 miles; William Mailbert, 4430 Greenwich place northwest, 44 miles; Julian R. Menafee, 3618 Conecticut avenue northwest, 35 miles, second offense; Allen Mesirow, 4900 Kansas avenue northwest, 42 miles; John B. 600 Pay Tribute to Helen Keller As Drive for Blind Library Opens

First Appeal for Funds Starts on Institution's 25th Anniversary.

Six hundred persons including Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, honored Helen Keller at a reception for the world's most famous blind person at the Mayflower Hotel last night.

The occasion was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the National Library for the Blind, and the launching of the first appeal for funds in the organization's history.

Introduced by Thomas P. Gore, the blind Senator from Oklahoma, as "the eighth wonder of the world," Miss Keller, who was left deaf, mute and blind by scarlet fever when she was only 18 months old, addressed the audience through her secretary, Miss Polly Thompson.

Though she had conquered her muteness, her voice was too indistinct to carry through the large ballroom. Miss Keller "listened" by placing her hand on the corner of her secretary's mouth.

Pays Tribute to Books.

"I can never resist making an appeal for books," Miss Keller said. "Books have so enriched and blessed my own life. It is my earnest hope that the efforts of the National Library committee to raise money to employ more blind copyists may meet with full measure of success.

"Not only will it provide them with occupation, it will give them the pride and satisfaction of accomplishment."

"As I stand here," she said, her radiant smile gone for the moment, "a corrowful thought comes over me when I realize that Dr. Wilmer is no longer with us.

"His steadfast courage to keep in human eyes God's light will ever be remembered. It is a work that will inspire others."

Urges Help for Blind.

"The blind," Mrs. Roosevelt said, "are so much richer when they conquer their handicaps in their personalities and in what they can give to the world. If we contribute to those who are trying to conquer these handicaps perhaps we may some day benefit by their rich personalities."

N. C. Hanks, who had lost both eyes and hands in a mine accident in Utah, made a dramatic appeal for the Nation's 125,000 sightless and for the blind copyists who make the Braille books for the library.

"This fund," he said, "will give blind workers the chance which is more in the hearts of every American than anything else—that of independently earning their slice of decent bread."

Throughout the other speeches, Miss Keller "listened" through the medium of the restless fingers of her secretary's right hand which were constantly playing in her palm.

She smiled at every joke and her eyes seemed to twinkle as if she, too, could see.

Gray-haired and genial, Senator Gore leaned back on his rubber-tipped cane, introduced every speaker with a flourish and told the audience that there was danger of losing the meagre annual Congressional appropriation for the library.

He told of the work of the library in distributing throughout the country Braille books that would cost individuals over $100 apiece.

Other speakers were Dr. W. Thornwall Davis, who succeeded Dr. Wilmer as national chairman of the fund appeal, and George W. Bean, a member of the board of directors of the library.

Negro Running To Street Car Killed by Auto

Death Is 21st in Traffic This Year; Woman Driver Is Held.

Manuel Evans, 36, a Negro of 426 K street northwest, was instantly killed early last night when struck by an automobile driven by Louise Buckingham, 38, 1525 Twenty-ninth street northwest, at Georgia avenue and Farragut street.

Evans, police said, was running for a street car, failed to see the oncoming auto, and crashed into its side. He was dead on arrival at Emergency Hospital.

Miss Buckingham was held at the Sixth Precinct Station on a technical charge pending action of the coroner. Evans was the twenty-first traffic death of the year. Twenty-one had been killed in traffic at this same time last year.

Austin S. Donaldson, 47, who told police he was a consulting engineer, demanded a jury trial and was released under $500 bond when arraigned in Police Court after his car allegedly struck a parked police motorcycle.

Policeman E. G. Comingore, of the Sixth Precinct, who owend the motorcycle, and who was talking to another motorist at Sixteenth and Decatur street northwest, started pursuit after Donaldson when he failed to stop after the accident. The motorcycle was damaged slightly.

Donaldson, who lives on a boat moored at Fourteenth and Water streets northwest, was arrested and charged with driving while intoxicated.

Junior Commerce Board Picks Heads

The Washington Junior Board of Commerce yesterday announced elections of officers for the 1936-1937 term, to be installed at the annual meeting April 7.

Albert E. Conradis, local attorney and vice president and general counsel of the Progressive Building & Loan Association, was elected president.

Other officers are John S. Bleeker, jr., first vice president; James Owens, second vice president; Morton H. Wilner, secretary; William H. Press, executive secretary; Charles L. Carr, treasurer; Roger Robb, general counsel; Harold Fangboner, Oliver Gasch, A. Boyd Hinds, William P. Jacobs, Aloysius I. Sheehan and Corcoran Thom, jr., directors for two years; Arthur H. Clephane, Jack Hayes, jr., William J. Ellis, Robert W. Wilson, Morton A. English and Otis T. Wingo, jr., directors for one year.

3 Police, Ruled Drunk at Trial, May Lose Jobs

Three policemen were recommended for dismissal and cases against three other continued yesterday after a meeting of the Police Trial Board at the Fourth Precinct.

Private C. A. Dodson, of the Second Precinct, was recommended for dismissal when the trial board found him guilty of being intoxicated while on flood duty at Wisconsin avenue and K street northwest, March 19. The charge was preferred by Inspector Edward G. Kelly.

Private J. P. Hoffman, Second Precinct, and Otis T. Clatterbock, of No. 8, were recommended for dismissal when found guilty of being intoxicated. Both men were reported to have returned to their returned to their stations intoxicated after a trick of duty.

The case of Policeman John W. Graham, who was charged with conduct prejudicial to the reputation, good order and discipline of the force, was continued by the board until March 31.

The board also continued cases against Policeman J. E. Lowery and Theo Crow, both of the Eleventh Precinct, who were charged with conduct prejudicial to the force.

Capacity Crowd Hears Post Travel Lecturer

Speaking before a capacity audience at the Masonac Auditorium last night, Eugene C. van Wyk, The Washington Post travel lecturer, invited the people of the United States to visit the Scandinavian countries and watch "a government of true democracy."

In Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Findland there is no depression, he stated, and the reason for this condition can be traced to the better relationship between labor and capital, and the absence of real issues between the political parties.

Court Urged To Overrule Beard's Plea

Government Brief States Phones Were Ringing at Time of Raid.

U. S. Defends Tapping of Wires; Cites Lower Court Decisions.

The Government yesterday asked the Supreme Court to dismiss without hearing the appeal by Sam Beard and others against their conviction and sentence for conspiracy to violate the District's gaming laws.

In the Government's brief a detailed description of the alleged gambling headquarters was presented to the court. It stated that 60 telephones were found by police and Federal officers who raided the downtown premises.

The Government stated that the building which was raided "had been occupied for a number of years by an organization purporting to be engaged in disseminating racing information."

Prior to the raid, the brief contended, detectives had heard voices broadcasting horse racing news and taking wagers. It stated that included in the betting paraphernalia seized in th eraid were 25 "loaded" dice.

In answer to an argument that the search had been unlawful, the brief stated the search was legal because at the time of the raid many telephones were ringing after officers broke down the doors and bets were coming in. At this moment, the brief said, Beard instructed others to tell the police nothing.

Evidence secured by tapping telephones also was defended by the Government. It said this had been offered at the trial not "for the truth of the statement overheard, but for the fact that the conversation took place."

Statements obtained from three of the jurors after the trial should not be considered, the Government declared, because "the jury was polled and each affiant stated individually that he or she found the petitioners guilty on each count."

"The case was fairly tried," the brief concluded, and "lower Federal courts of the District of Columbia gave careful consideration to the contentions urged by the petitioner and found them without merit."

Nutrition Institute Plans Usual Fare Today.

Calories, vitamines and carbohydrates, the ABC's of nutrition experts, will be overlooked at the luncheon today of members of the American Institute of Nutrition at the Washington Hotel.

Instead of arranging a perfectly-balanced menu that would serve as a model to all luncheon-eaters in the country, the nutrition experts intend to partake of the regular hotel fare.

The luncheon will be held at the conclusion of the morning sermon of the conference at which experts from all parts of the country will discuss the nutrition values of foods and the metabolism of children and infants.

The afternoon session of the conference will be devoted to a symposium on the "nutritional history of the depression". Adelaide Spohn, former nutritional director of the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission, and Dr. James S. McLester, president of the American Medical Association, will be the principal speakers.

Tonight, the Institute will hold its annual dinner at the Dodge Hotel.

Poisoning of 2 Dogs Puzzle to Residents

SANDY.

'Petie' and 'Sandy,' Pets of the Neighborhood, Are Recovering.

In Shepherd Park, which is out Brightwood way, everybody is so friendly that it is hard to believe any person living there would have done it.

Petie is a 1-year-old cocker spaniel owned by Norman L. Roddy, of 1341 Jonquil street northwest, and Sandy is a 7-year-old collie, owned by D. B. Sober, jr., 1329 Jonquil street northwest.

The dogs, which romped together through the neighborhood, were poisoned yesterday and police could conclude only that some individual with an aversion for dogs was responsible.

Neither of the dogs ever had bothered anyone, so far as was known. Both had reputations of being friendly, although Petie, the cocker spaniel, twice had driven intruders away from the Roddy home at night.

The two dogs were well after having been fed at home yesterday. Shortly after they returned they suffered convulsions and their owners called a veterinarian, E. E. Ruebush. He concluded they had been given a poison.

He took the two pets to his Georgia avenue hospital and last night they were reported recovering.

This news was welcome to Joe (Sonny) Roddy and Janet Lorene Sober.

The attempted killing of Petie and Sandy is not the first of its kind in Shepherd Park.

About a year ago a woman in the neighborhood reported that several of her cats had been poisoned.

Blanton Says He Will Miss Health Talks

Avers He Won't Attend Meeting Tomorrow at Brookings.

Interest Rises Because He Also Rejected Previous Bid.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, said last night he was not planning to attend the "What Price Public Health" mass meeting to be held in the Brookings Institution auditorium tomorrow night.

Interest in the assembly, which is being sponsored by the District Tuberculosis Association, mounted following Blanton's negative reply, because he also replied "no" when asked whether he would attend the District Medical Society's mass meeting which was held February 16 in Central High School auditorium.

Blanton was one of the earliest arrivals, later addressing the gathering and almost becoming embroiled in a fistic row when physicians resented his charges that they "chisel" on the District government and are largely responsible for the high tuberculosis death rate here.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland said yesterday he planned to attend the meeting, among whose speakers will be Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, of the House District Committee.

Unspected Hospital.

Deeply interested in correcting the inadequacy of appropriations for the Health Department and municipal hospitals, Senator Capper, a former chairman of the Senate District Committee, recently accepted an invitation by The Post to inspect Tuberculosis Hospital. He is a member ex officio of the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations which is now conducting hearings on the 1937 supply bill.

With the Budget Bureau studying health and hospital estimates in the fiscal measure and public hearings before the Senate sub-committee not expected to be scheduled before late next week, tomorrow's mass meeting holds the spotlight in the campaign for ample funds.

Addresses will be given by Prof. Allen Freeman, dean of public health administration at Johns Hopkins University; Ross Garrett, co-ordinator of the Medical Economic Security Administration; Dr. Prentiss Willson, representing the District Medical Society; Senator Capper and Mrs. Norton.

Dr. White to Preside.

Dr. William Charles White, president of the Tuberculosis Association, will preside.

Dr. Ruhland appeared yesterday before the Senate appropriations sub-committee, of which Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat) of Oklahoma, is chairman, and told the members in executive session the needs of the health department. Its estimates for 1937 were trimmed $35,000 by the Budget Bureau and $23,800 more was eliminated by the House, which has passed the bill, at the behest of Representative Blanton.

Held on Check Charge.

Charles Town, W. Va., March 24. C. E. Metz, of the Jefferson Mills, charged with felony for presentation of a worthless check in payment of a freight bill to a railway agent here, was held under bond of $800 for the Jefferson County grand jury in April following a hearing before Justice J. T. C. Green. Metz furnished bond.

A Torrid Romance of the Arctic Is Transplanted to Screen With Notable Cast

A Stage Farce Becomes a Bit Torpid as Film

Montgomery and Loy Star; Another Bill Changed; Amusement Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

That blistering romance of the Arctic, if you can handle a bit of a paradox, "Petticoat Fever," seems to have lost some of its frigid fire, if you can do with another one, in course of its transcription to the screen, despite the fact that Robert Montgomery and Myrna Loy are together again in the principal roles for the first time since "When Ladies Meet."

At least, that is the impression the celluloid version of Mark Reed's Broadway hit of two or three seasons ago gave these eyes and ears at yesterday afternoon's preview in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange. While all of the lines and business seemed to be there intact, there still seemed to be something lacking to smash over the romantic story of the Labrador radio operator and the marooned companion of a pompous Englishman of title with the irresistible humor and surge that the farce exerted on the stage.

To be sure, "Petticoat Fever" was designed rather for the stage than for the screen. Most of its action takes place in the living room of the bleak wireless station on an icebound Arctic coast and the piece, therefore, becomes principally a vehicle of conversation instead of action. There is movement, of course, and occasionally an outdoor sequence offers a bit of variety by disclosing ice floes and unbroken fields of snow extending to the horizon, no matter in what direction one looks. This barren outlook, however, is not an ideal source of such changing scenes as the cinema requires to be effective.

Play Photographed "Verbatim."

More nearly than any recent screen adaptation that comes to mind "Petticoat Fever" is merely a photographed stage play. The comedy at times seems just a bit labored and the lines less sparkling than they sounded when spoken across the footlights.

Robert Montgomery seems to me to be the misfit. He seems never quite to ignite the spark needed to make the lines of the comedy explosive. Myrna Loy and Reginald Owen come nearer striking fire, but even they seem to be laboring under a consciousness of the restraint imposed upon them by the narrow confines of the locale in which the major part of the action, if that is what it may be called, is placed. Rather the best job of the lot is done by Otto Yamaoka, in the role of Kimo, Operator Dinsmore's man-of-all-work out on the rim of civilization. Otto is a born comedian.

These, needless to say, are cursory observations prompted by first reactions within an hour of the viewing of the picture. A closer analysis will appear in this space on Saturday morning after "Petticoat Fever" has been accorded its formal opening on the screen at Loew's Fox Theater on Friday.

Those who did not see the stage play will have a distinct advantage over those who did, if I had my eyes and ears on straight yesterday afternoon.

Among those present during part of yesterday's screening were "Buddy" Rogers and Jeannie Lang, appearing this week on the Fox stage. "Buddy" was particularly elated over the success of his relief fund broadcast Monday night over Station WJSV. What was expected to be an hour on the air stretched out to an hour and a half, the broadcast extending from 11:30 p. m. to 1 a. m., with Arthur Godfrey acting as master of ceremonies in conjunction with Rogers, whose time was considerably taken up in leading his California Cavaliers. Something in excess of $600 was realized in cash, checks and pledges in denominations ranging from $5 to $100.

Just before "Buddy" and Jeannie put in their appearance for a peek at "Petticoat Fever," the drama desks that had arrived early were treated to a preview of an M.-G.-M. natural-color screen revue, "The Pirates' Party," a lively business, staged on Catalina Island and enlisting the services of "Buddy" and Jeannie and the Cavaliers, together with a long list of Hollywood stars and another of those ne plus ultra dancing choruses. "The Pirates' Party" is a splendid running mate for the "At the Lido" subject now being shown on the bill with Chaplin's "Modern Times" at the Palace.

The charming young women serving in various capacities in Sam Wheeler's Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange, since "Buddy" made the rounds and met them all, probably never will be the same again!

Columbia Switches Bill.

By another of those precipitate switches in bookings, engineered by the New York home office of Loew's, Inc., the attraction at Loew's Columbia Theater, beginning Friday, will not be "Timothy's Quest," the screen version of the Frances Hodgson Burnett story, but a renewal of the downtown run of "Wife Versus Secretary."

"Wife Versus Secretary" will be recalled as the wholly innocent triangle drama in which the principal roles are played by Myrna Loy, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow—Miss Loy as the wife, and Miss Harlow as the secretary of the title.

The sudden substitution of the repeat engagement for the new one, does not necessarily signify that "Timothy's Quest" has been permanently stricken from the Columbia's booking sheets. In fact, I am assured by the Loew executives that it will be coming along a little later, with Dickie Moore, Virginia Weidler, Elizabeth Patterson and Eleanore Whitney in the pivotal roles.

When "Colleen" comes to the screen at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday, pictureqoers of the Capital will find themselves facing a screen cast that includes three "teams" of stars. In the foremost romantic roles will be Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler; as a sort of serio-comic romantic relief will be Jack Oakie and Joan Blondell, and for sheer out-and-out foolishness Hugh Herbert and Louise Fazenda have been paired. Added to all this will be the superlative tap dancing of Paul Draper, probably the foremost exponent of this type of terpsichorean effort appearing on the stage today—although for him it seems to be no effort.

The stage bill also will be notable. Next week is the week in which Paul Lukas will make his personal appearances on the Earle stage in "Romantic Interludes," a playlet in which he is supported by two associate artists. This, to the best of my knowledge and belief, will be Mr. Lukas' first appearance on a Washington stage—certainly his first since achieving fame as a star of the cinema.

Graduation and Matriculation.

Three students will be given diplomas of graduation from the National Academy of Stage Training during the students' performance on the stage of the National Theater on Friday afternoon of this week at 4:30 o'clock.

Those who have completed the three terms at the academy are Eleanor Charis, Marion Anderson and Mary A. Clagett. Two junior students will receive awards of honor, following three terms in the special course for children. They are Helene Ann Wallack and Idalyn Cohen.

A diversified program will be given at the National on Friday afternoon, including four playlets, directed by Maurice Greet and Mildred Coleman, and a dance program directed by Marion D. Venable.

New Term in April.

It is announced by Stephen E. Cochran, founder of the school, that the spring term of the National Academy will begin on Monday, April 6. The new term will be the academy's eleventh since its establishment three years ago.

It is pointed out that one of the advantages the National Academy is able to offer its pupils is its close affiliation with the professional stage. During the season, many of the foremost actors in the American theater visit the academy and address the students. Among those who have performed this valuable function may be mentioned Daniel Frohman, dean of American producers; Brock Pemberton, George M. Cohan, Guy Robertson, Solly Ward and Sam Forrester.

A number of the academy's graduates have been successful in joining the forces of the professional theater, among them Edwina Wise, now appearing in Max Gordon's "Pride and Prejudice;" George Calvert, playing in "Personal Appearance;" Eugene Stevens, Rodifer Wilson, Arthur Little and Eleanor Campbell.

Gastronomically and socially, members of the Variety Club of Washington are in for another strenuous week-end. On Sunday night at 7 o'clock, members and their wives will foregather in the handsome new clubrooms in the Willard Hotel to "tackle" the special spaghetti dinner which A. Julian Brylawski will prepare. Barker Brylawski's culinary talents, particularly when involved in the business of concocting spaghetti sauces, are widely acclaimed, no fatalities as yet having resulted. Following the spaghetti repast all guests will join the Social Committee's card party.

On Monday at 1 p. m., the club members will assemble at the Willard for the regular bi-monthly luncheon. Harry Brown, chairman of the club's house committee and Washington branch exchange manager for First Division Pictures, will preside as "king for the day." Mr. Brown declares that he has hit upon something new in the matter of entertainment.

A Valiant Woman.

A woman who talked back to cardinals and laid down the law to a Pope four centuries before the first "feminist movement" began, is the central character in the play of "Catherine, the Valiant," which the Blackfriars' Guild will present in St. Paul's auditorium, the first four days of next week, March 30 and 31 and April 1 and 2.

This drama, laid against a colorful background of medieval intrigue, tells the story of Catherine of Siena, who was one of the most arresting figures in the calendar of saints.

Mary Crowley, who created the role when the play was produced in Washington in 1934, again will be seen in the title part of the strong-willed Catherine.

Weather Forecast.

The 'Old Master' Comes Back to Life on Screen

The beauty, color, spectacular effects and magnificence that the late Florenz Ziegfeld was wont to invoke in his annual adventures in "glorifying the American girl" are said to be completely dwarfed by the magnitude and splendor of the scenes devised by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for its production of "The Great Ziegfeld," coming to the National Theater as a two-a-day, roadshow attraction on the night of Sunday, April 19. Above is pictured one of the bizarre touches lent one of the Harriet Hoctor ballet numbers, danced to music by Con Conrad with art direction by Cedric Gibbons. This is only one of a succession of such unique tableaux.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan.

Manhattan Promenade.

Watching Milton Berle wowing 'em at the Paradise early Monday morning, I was thinking of the curious change of heart experienced by Broadway in relation to him . . . It was not so long back that he was upbraided and denounced as a gag-thiever . . . Other comics trying to take the heart out of the youngster before he got too good, ridiculed him and then substituted threats for ridicule when he kept on coming . . . Today, he is the fastest and funniest of the Broadway comedy brood, and within himself, he has enough material for a one-man show running 60 hilarious minutes . . . He wears a wristwatch that is a testimonial to his ability to occupy a stage humorously for a length of time . . . Balaban and Katz, the Chicago theatrical entrepreneurs, had booked an Earl Carroll show into one of their theaters . . . Train connection went blooey, and they learned that the show would arrive an hour later than expected . . . But B. and K. had sold their tickets, and they had to give the audience a show . . . Berle, in Chicago, accepted the dangerous emergency assignment, and for 56 minutes put on a one-man show that was a new high in solo performances . . . He is very proud of the wristwatch, for Broadwayites put great store in wristwatches and cigarette cases and souvenir police badges and Elks' teeth and honorary cards, prizing these mementos even above coin of the realm.

Dan Healy, I guess, has the greatest collection of these honorary police cards and tokens and souvenirs, each a service stripe of benefits played at theaters throughout the countryside . . . As he is a law-abiding citizen, Mr. Healy has no use whatsoever for these cards, and they have no cash value, but in the passage of years they have grown to such an extent that if Healy now walks in the public boulevards he is weighed down on one side . . . You might think that the people who are forever calling on actors to play benefits would reciprocate by hunting out these actors at the night clubs where they work and spending some money, but this rarely if ever happens . . . If all the people for whom Dan Healy has given benefit shows would go to his Broadway Room and spend some money he would be a millionaire . . . Then he could buy a high-powered automobile, fast enough to break all of the speed laws, and finally win an opportunity to use all of the honorary cards which load down the left inside pocket of his coat.

Dear Ed: Traveling by plane to Pittsburgh (and how I had to beg for passage, to Columbus then to Pittsburgh out of Cleveland via train), I came upon a scene that I'll never forget. Words will never picture what happened here. But say this Pittsburgh and its people—they're not taking the count on one knee, a la Max Baer. They're battered and in distress, but they're still on their feet and swinging with both hands. One of the worst hit was the theatrical church, the new St. Mary's, downtown, near the Pittsburgh Press. It was completely flooded. In school, I remember reading an essay by Robert Louis Stevenson about death—he could have learned about destruction here, a ghost city. The Lunt and Fontanne show was cancelled. So was Xavier Cugat and Maj. Bowes' troupe. They had an experience they'll never forget. But this city, like the stage troupers, insists that the show must go on, come hell or high water. A game crowd, these Pittsburghers, and worthy of a bow in your column. Sincerely,

NICHOLAS G. TROILO.

Chief Hamilton was honored at the Kit-Kat Monday morning by the biggest party the stem has seen in some years . . . the chief, despite his moniker, is not the last of the Mohicans, of whom Fenimore Cooper wrote, nor is he a Cherokee, an Arapahoe or a Seneca tribesman . . . he is an engraver in a New York printing house, who likes Broadway, and at night his tent is a night club, and his squaws are the prettiest of the show girl and chorus girl colony . . . They sit at his table, eat and drink with him, and the chief gives them a nice time without ever making a pass at them, because he is a nice guy . . . It was not accidental that ten mothers were at his Kit-Kat party . . . They were there because the chief is gentlemanly to their daughters, and a gentleman is something of a novelty . . . Unfortunately, at 4 a. m., with the oratory extolling Chief Hamilton at its height, the rude gendarmes on post walked in and announced that the party had to shut down . . . So he will be given another party at the Kit-Kat, the only guest of honor within the memory of Broadway ever asked to play a return date.

This is the time of year when high school youngsters arrive for their interviews, later to be whipped into composition papers for their English teachers . . . A 16-year-old girl from Washington Irving High School has just left . . . She asked me all the regular questions, so I asked her after she'd finished, what her ambition might be. "I'd like to have a job where I could just sort of sit around and look at moving picture stars," the youngster said, and she wasn't fooling . . . Say, it isn't bad work if you can get it!

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the Washington String Quartet (Milton Schwartz, Paul Brightenburg, George Wargo and Howard Mitchell) in the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker Tuesday afternoon. Program: Quartet in G major (Mozart), Quartet No. 4 (Quincy Porter), Quartet in D major (Chaikovski).

In their last concert of the season, these four young musicians, who have been a credit to Washington in their visits to the Manhattan stronghold of music, maintained their excellent standard of balanced and sensitized playing. Their tone showed traces of the weariness resultant from orchestral rehearsals, but this did not detract from the spirit of their performance or from the artistic finish of their work. During the three seasons that this foursome has been under my observation, its organic growth has been so steady and its sincerity so manifest that I consider it to be one of the most promising American ensembles.

Their program yesterday, while not enthralling in material, was at least interesting in contrasts. Mozart's third quartet, containing some naivetes of the apprenticeship stage as well as a lively wit in invention, was an odd neighbor for Quincy Porter's sophisticated modernism. By and large, the most rewarding work was Chaikovski's D major quartet with its nostalgic and haunting andante cantabile movement.

Had Chaikovski always been able to control his temperament as he did in this quartet, he would have been a greater composer. The restraint of the writing is admirable, for the emotional charge is high . . . the expression is kept within bounds by an artistic perce . . . of relative values. Because of this rational limitation, the quartet is a more effective work than the hysterical sixth symphony.

While intent upon catching the drift of Mr. Porter's quartet, I was reminded of a recent remark of William Rose Benet about radical poets. "If I have to read a poem three times," he said, "and then can't paraphrase what the man is saying, at least the gist of it, in ordinary words, I don't consider that what he has to say is of any importance, though his way of saying it may have a wild attractiveness."

Mr. Porter's quartet is not as cryptic as all that, nor is his music devoid of intriguing characteristics. But he is so deliberate in his avoidance of the least conventionality, in his insistence upon being different, that his musical syntax is sometimes baffling. Yet the music has the virtues of precision and incisiveness, of force and logic.

D. C. Chapter American Guild of Organists presents Conrad Bernier in recital Tuesday night in National City Christian Church. Program: Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Chorale-Prelude, "De Profundis;" Toccata in F major (Bach), Sonata in B flat major (Mendelssohn), "Piece Heroique" (Franck), "Romance sans Paroles" (Bernier), Prelude in G major (Dallier), "Lied" (Tanguay), Finale from Symphony No. 5 (Vierne).

Conrad Bernier so arranged his program last night as to alternate between the brilliant and the contemplative styles, and handled them both competently. There was an excess of fervor, however, in the building of several climaxes wherein clarity of thematic structure was sacrificed to magnified sonorities. In the main, his registrations were judicious, showing a fine sense of balance and artistic feeling for tonal values.

It was pleasant to hear one of Mendelssohn's organ sonatas, which have gone somewhat out of vogue in recent years. In fact, it seems to have been almost forgotten that Mendelssohn was a great organist, and that his recitals virtually revolutionized organ playing in England, awakening it from torpor and quickening it with a new spirit. The B flat sonata is an admirably constructed work and contains much interesting material set forth with beauty of phrase and harmonic subtleties.

Franck's "Piece Heroique" was given an eloquent and impressive reading. After its soaring flight came three novelties: the first performance of Mr. Bernier's own "Romance sans Paroles," a poetic meditation of gracious movement; Dallier's charming little Prelude in G major and G. E. Tanguay's "Lied," which is too long and improvisational for its title.

Hollywood, March 23.

Shirley Temple is standing on a stage, ready to sing a comedy song about "Peck's Soap" for a broadcasting sequence in the flicker "Poor Little Rich Girl." Director Irving Cummings gives the signal. Shirley begins singing. It is an amusing number, and Shirley seems to enjoy doing it. Suddenly Shirley starts giggling. The camera stops turning. Mrs. Temple races to the stage. "What's the matter, Shirley? What happened?" Shirley is calm. She answers: "My tooth fell out." Shirley uses a cap over a new front tooth, just coming in. A new cap is supplied for the one which fell out. The number continues.

Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray and Alison Skipworth are playing a scene for "A Princess Comes Across." After the scene is completed Director William Howard says: "Very good. Very good. Now let's do it again." The scene and Director Howard's dialogue are repeated again and again. Miss Lombard impersonates a princess in this scene. She sounds exactly as she did when, in her dressing room, she imitated Garbo for laughs. Now she's being paid for it. Playing the scene again, Lombard blows up in her lines. She lets out a Bronx cheer—but delightfully. Too bad it won't be in the flicker.

The flicker version of "The Good Earth" is finally in production. Paul Muni, looking more Chinese than your laundryman, is in a bed in his hut. The sun is pouring in through the window. Director Franklin is ready and Muni reads the line: "This is the day." Later, I learn that this is the third day of shooting; it is the third day Muni has said: "This is the day."

On the set of "Zero Hour," now titled "Road to Glory," the war is still raging. The bombs are bursting and the sound effects are loud. In fact, there has been a complaint from a lady who lives near the studio. Before Director Howard Hawks issues the order for Fredric March and Warner Baxter to go over the top, Supervisor Nunnally Johnson reads a letter written to the studio. It is from a Mrs. Rose Felinegh. She states: "My angora cat is due to have a baby, and because of the noise at your studio I am afraid something will happen. The noise could be eliminated if you people would learn how to make pictures." She may be right.

W. C. Fields and Rochelle Hudson are at a hot dog stand at the carnival for a sequence in "Poppy." Fields and Miss Hudson are eating frankfurters which Fields bought, but can't pay for. They must almost finish eating them before the proprietor learns this. Director Eddie Sutherland orders another "take" and another "take." Rochelle Hudson says: "You would have to make this scene right after lunch." She can hardly eat another hot dog, although it is for the sake of art. Bill Fields still doesn't read any line the same way twice. After an unusual reading, Fields says to the other players and the director: "I fooled you, didn't I?"

* * * *

A short called "The Changing of the Guard" is being made at Warners.' It features Sybil Jason, and is directed by Bobby Connelly. The scene is outside of Buckingham Palace, showing the ceremony when one set of the guards arrives to replace the other. It is the same number, with another march tune, which was used in the last "Follies" produced by Florenz Ziegfeld. This number was then staged by Bobby Connelly. The girl who led the soldiers in the "Follies" was Mitzi Mayfair. The movies, famed for being collossal, have substituted Sybil Jason for Mitzi Mayfair. And the Buckingham number is being shot at Warners' on—a New York Street.

* * * *

Director George Cukor is still directing the ballroom sequence for the flicker "Romeo and Juliet." The actors and actresses dance or strut about the lavish set. Director Cukor is dissatisfied. He shouts to the performers: "Don't be so haughty. Just because you're dressed up and have titles you don't have to act that way."

* * * *

Fredric March who a day ago was a soldier, unkempt and dirty, in "Road to Glory" is now the fine Bothwell in the flicker version of "Mary of Scotland." He is playing his entrance scene for Director John Ford. Katharine Hepburn is not working this day. She stands on the set in overalls and a beret, watching. She doesn't like visitors when she's working. I tell Miss Hepburn that I am working, but that if she'll be careful not to disturb me I'll allow her to stay on the set.

Only 3 Clip Par in North-South Golf at Pinehurst; Cox Gets 72

Trio Get 71s In Opening Round

Picard, Thomson and Barron Are Leaders for $4,500 Purse.

Carolina Course Drops Favorites Into 73 and 74 Brackets.

By the Associated Press.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 24.—Professional golf's tournament brigade found the remodeled Pinehurst No. 2 course a severe test of their games today and only Henry Picard, Herman Barron and Jimmy Thomson, who tied at 71, were able to break par for the first round of the $4,000 North and South open championship.

It was the first time on the "winter circuit" that no one had broken 70.

While the three leaders clipped a stroke off standard figures for the new layout which has grass greens replacing the traditional Pinehurst sand putting surfaces, only one other player, Wiffy Cox, of Kenwood Club, Washington, D. C., equaled par 72. Cox shot a brace of 36s.

Seven Others Get 73s.

Seven others carded 73s and six had 74, making only 17 of 74 or better.

George T. Dunlap, jr., former amateur champion, took a 79. He was two strokes behind another amateur, Morton McCarthy, of Norfolk, Va., who turned in a 77.

Johnny Revolta, of Chicago, the P. G. A. champion, who was unable to get in a practice round because of a business engagement, had an 80.

The high scoring was in the face of good weather conditions and the fact that the tee markers were so placed that the course played more than 300 yards short of its nearly 7,000 yards maximum length. Tomorrow the tee markers will be moved back part way and for the third and fourth rounds on Thursday the course will be at full length.

Those with 73s were Ray Mangrum, Pittsburgh; Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J.; Tommy Armour, Chicago; Water Hagen, Detroit; Jack Mackie, jr., New York; Roy Bronsdon, Oysterville, Mass., and E. J. Harrison, Little Rock, Ark.

Bracketed at 74 were Leonard Dodson, Pembrine, Wis.; Bobby Cruickshank, Richmond, Va.; Gene Sarazen, Brookfield Center, Conn.; Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill.; Denny Shute, Boston, and Ramon Atkins, Fayetteville, N. C.

Leroy Haynes Is Signed For Fight With Godfrey

Philadelphia, March 24 (AP).—Leroy Haynes, three-round technical knockout conqueror of Primo Carnera, and George Godfrey, the International Boxing Federation's world heavyweight champion, were signed tday for a ten-round bout in the Arena on April 13.

Haynes, who came here from Los Angeles a year ago, postponed a trip to his mother's home in South Bend, Ind., to be on hand for the State athletic commission meeting, sanctioning the bout under the promotion of Taylor and Gunnis. Both fighters are colored.

Linke and Weaver Face Tigers in Today's Game

Deland, Fla., March 24.—The Nats move into higher company tomorrow after three games against minor league opposition which saw them lose one and win two.

Ed Linke and Monte Weaver will go to the mound tomorrow against the champion Detroit Tigers at Lakeland, and on Thursday the Nats move to Sarasota to meet the expensive Boston Red Sox. On Friday they make the hop to Bradenton, where Buck Newsom will pitch against the Cardinals.

Olympic Hope at Fort Myer

Harris & Ewing.

LIEUT. RICHARD BAUER, of the Third Cavalry, at Fort Myer, started active outdoor training yesterday for the June Olympic tryouts in New York. A star at West Point, he is pointing for the 1,500-meter race, in which he will wear the colors of the New York A. C.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Deland, Fla., March 24.

THERE may be nothing significant in the fact that Bucky Harris is managing the club that last year managed to get more runners on base by being hit with pitched balls than any other team in the league, but it's an idea.

POVICH.

In his hey-day with the Nats, Harris himself was the master of the art of getting one's self hit by a pitched ball, and he may or may not have imparted his skill in that direction to his present crew of athletes. But in Cecil Travis, the Nats last year had the individual champion at the getting-hit business. It apparently is a distinction peculiar to Washington teams because the last generation of fans have learned to regard Kid Elberfeld, Washington third baseman, as the man who could best maneuver his anatomy into the line of a pitch and thus get on base.

Clark Griffith declares with some pride that it was Harris' ability to get himself hit with pitched balls that played a powerful part in the Nats' pennant triumphs of 1924 and 1925.

So frequently was the boy manager of the Washington club getting pinked at the plate that reports spread throughout the league that Harris was wearing a special pad across his ribs the better to take the blow.

That accusation Harris laughs off, but he does tell the story of the day late in the 1925 pennant race when, with the bases full and the score tied in the ninth inning and himself due at bat, he announced to his mates on the bench that he was going to win the ball game even if he had to take a pitch in the back. And that's what happened. On the first inside ball that Charley Ruffing threw, Harris faked a violent effort to get out of the way, got himself hit and forced over the winning run.

Elberfeld's skill at the business of getting himself hit lay chiefly in his clever trick of turning toward the plate on inside balls and getting hit on the arms, according to Griffith. Possessor of a good eye at the plate, Elberfeld was uncanny in the manner in which he was able to get his arms in the way of a pitch at the same time appearing to make an honest effort to duck.

So clever was Elberfeld, according to Griffith, that he once dared any pitcher to hurt him in spring practice one day when he revealed his trick. Always holding his arms at an angle to the pitch, he never took more than a glancing blow and even Walter Johnson's fast ball failed to hurt him.

Despite his record of being hit more times last year than any other player in the league, young Cecil Travis apparently does not make the deliberate attempt to get himself socked that Elberfeld and Harris did. It is merely Travis' preference for inside pitches that has earned him this distinction.

Travis, who came to the Nats as a leftfield hitter, despite the fact that he is left-handed, for two years has been attempting to pull the ball to rightfield and thus get the full power of his body behind his swing. He dislikes to miss the opportunity to hit at an inside ball and thus it is, when the pitch is too far inside, he gets himself socked so frequently.

In Short—

Despite the fact that he is the champion at this getting-hit business, Travis is no more bat-shy than one of Bobby Burke's fast balls . . . After Thornton Lee, of the Indians, had put him in the hospital for two weeks with a bean ball, Travis returned to the game and the first pitcher he faced was Lee . . . He was shy, all right, one base shy of a home run . . . Billy Starr, recognized now as the best handler of pitchers among the Nats' catching staff, would be the team's No. 1 catcher if he were able to hit .250 . . . In recent games, Dee Miles has re-established himself solidly in the race for the rightfield job . . . The red-haired Chattanooga graduate who was a sore disappointment to Harris in the early weeks here, now has begun to smack the ball solidly . . . When he hit his home run in the first inning today it was his second in two consecutive times at bat . . . both balls were well powdered . . . Miles, with a sweep stroke, possesses the most unorthodox style at bat of any player on the club, but he gets tremendous power into his swing when he pulls the ball to rightfield.

Minneapolis Trips Nats By 5 to 4

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

DELAND, Fla., March 24.—With a pair of home runs in the first inning, the Nats set a bad example this afternoon for the Minneapolis Millers who fell into the habit with great frequency before the ball game was over and clubbed out a 5-4 victory.

Washington proved itself only a flash in the pan at this home-run business, which was superinduced by the pitch-and-putt park here. After Dee Miles had smacked the first ball pitched over the rightfield fence for a homer and Jake Powell had banged another ball over the leftfield fence a few minutes later, the Nats had shot their home-run bolt.

The Millers did not begin to fight until the fourth. Then Pinch Hitter Luther stepped up to the plate and walloped one off Pete Appleton to tie the score.

Minneapolis, it seems, was just beginning to get violent with the Washington pitching. Big Buzz Arlett, who is no stranger to home-run fame, smacked one far over the rightfield fence in the fifth to tie the score again at 4-4 and in the eighth, with Dick Lanahan pitching for Washington, Spencer Harris won the ball game for the Millers with (you guessed it) a home run over the distant fence in dead center.

Nats Are Near Tie.

The Nats had the tying and winning runs on base in the ninth, but it wouldn't have been close had not the ghost of Fred Merkle's famous boner reared itself up to choke off a threatening Minneapolis uprising in the fifth inning.

After Arlett had banged his fifth-inning homer off Appleton, Dutch Holland walloped a double to center and Gaffke smacked a single to right. Holland crossed the plate on Gaffke's blow only to learn with dismay that his run didn't count because Gaffke had neglected the formality of touching first on his two-base hit, a matter that was brought to the umpire's attention by the entire Washington infield.

It was all very deceptive, the way the ball game started. The 400 folks in the stands sat back to marvel at the big leaguers for nine innings after Dee Miles had rammed the first pitch over the fence. When Powell followed with his home run clout to left, the spectators began to speculate on the size of the score at this rate.

The Millers got a run back off Appleton in the first after Andy Cohen doubled, but the Nats made it 3-1 in the second on singles by Kuhel, Bolton and Lewis. Cohen and Arlett reduced this margin to

Group Reorganizes Indian Spring Club

Some 150 members of Indian Spring Country Club met last night, reorganized and voted to revert to the original name—Indian Spring Club.

The members won thec lub back from Tom Moore, poperty owner, and elected Dr. A. Thomas Utz as chairman of the board of governors, which will have absolute control of all club matters.

Bergman Will Address C. U. Alumni Tuesday

Arthur J. (Dutch) Bergman, athletic director at Catholic University, will address C. U. alumni at a dinner meeting at the University Club Tuesday at 7 p. m. He will discuss the football schedule and resumption of baseball as a recognized sport at the university. Motion pictures in color of the Orange Bowl game last New Years will be shown.

Maryland-C. U. Scrimmage Set Today

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY'S annual spring warfare with Maryland's football forces will be resumed this afternoon at College Park, where Coach "Dutch" Bergman's smooth and highly polished machine will be turned loose on the not-as-smooth but just as ambitious young Terrapins. The workout will be conducted in private, or as private as it can be under prevailing circumstances.

It will be one of those scrimmages where first one team and then the other takes the ball for a specified number of plays. Catholic, however, is expected to spend the best part of the time on defensive play, inasmuch as Bergman is fairly well acquainted with the offensive ability of his men.

The most important man on Maryland's side of the ball will be George Meade, a lithe and powerful halfback who was just about all of the freshman team last autumn. Nothing, it seemed, but a brick wall could stop young Meade in freshman competition. Now it remains to be seen how good he'll be in the big time.

Jack Hagerty's punting problems at Georgetown have been further complicated by the appearance of one Johnny Fleming on the scene, who threatens to kick the bladder out of every football he lays a foot on. Although no relation of "Red" Fleming, who graduated from Catholic U. last year, the youngster also plays end and plays it well. He is by far the best punter on the squad out for spring training.

The rub—and it's irritating—is that Fleming can catch passes and outrun any rival, but he can't outplay either Snyder or Cavadine, who'll probably win the regular berths. Thus, as Hagerty points out, Fleming might get off a 70-yard punt, but if the opposition got it all back around his end on the next play the punt would be nullified.

Fleming hails from LaSalle Military Academy, Oakdale, Long Island, which also sent Bill Valiquette and Joe Franks to the Hilltop. All three have shown vast improvement since their freshman year and are expected to see plenty of action.

Maryland Tracks Adopt Waite 'Eye' To Judge Finishes

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., March 24.—The Maryland Racing Commission today adopted as the official photographing machine for Maryland race tracks the "electric eye" invented by Charles M. Waite.

It is said this photographing device has performed satisfactorily at the present race meeting at Tropical Park, Fla.

After discussing the various "eyes" with members of Maryland's four-mile tracks it was decided to have the Waite machine installed in time at all tracks this spring.

The Waite machine is operated from atop the steward's stand on a direct line with the finish. It photographs all horses finishing a race. For the past few weeks Jervis Spencer, jr., chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission, has been studying the "electric eye" used the past winter at Santa Anita, Calif., as well as the "eye" used during the recent Hialeah Park (Florida) session.

Greenberg Set On Holdout Demands

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 24.—Hank Greenberg's holdout is the real McCoy, although Detroit's slugging first baseman gave signs today of weakening just a bit.

"I know where I should be and where I'd like to be," said skyscraping Hank, "but this is legitimate business. I'm not fooling and, by the looks of things, neither is the club."

Hank has been holding out in his Bronx apartment, spending most of his time there except for a daily workout in a nearby city park. Some of his friends—semi-pro ball players—are his "sparring mates."

The big fellow, voted the American League's most valuable player last year, reports himself in good physical trim. He weighs 205 pounds—five pounds over his playing weight.

"I should have been down in Florida with the club three weeks ago," Hank sighed. "I realize that every day I'm away from there I'm losing something, but there's a principle involved in my case. I believe I'm entitled to more money than the club has offered me.

"If this wasn't on the level I'd tell the world in a minute how much I'm asking; what the club has offered and the amount of the compromise I proposed. I won't do that, however, because this matter concerns just the club and me."

Hank was paid approximately $12,500 last year and, like Dizzy Dean, was reported to have asked $40,000 for his services this year. Dizzy settled for a reported $22,500 and it is believed likely that Greenberg will compromise for that much or less.

3 Favorites Out In Augusta Tourney

Marion Miley, Titleholder, Among Those Beaten in First Round.

By the Associated Press.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 24.—The treacherous country club course took its toll of favorites today, including Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., the defending titleholder, in the opening round of the sixth annual Augusta women's invitation golf tournament.

A comparatively unknown shotmaker, Miss Barbara Bourne, of Augusta, who barely qualified yesterday with a 94 for the championship flight, eliminated Miss Miley 1-up after being all square through the first nine holes.

Another former champion, Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., and Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., listed among the favorites, were dropped from the running.

Edith Beggs, of Cleveland, Ohio, surprised by conquering Miss Hemphill, who recently defeated Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, of Philadelphia, the national champion, in the finals of the Belle Air, Fla., tournament. Miss Beggs took a 1-up lead after nine holes and defeated Miss Hemphill, 2 up.

Conquered in last year's finals by Miss Miley, Peggy Wattles, of Buffalo, N. Y., advanced to the quarter-final round by eliminating Miss Bauer in a keenly contested match, 1 up, in 19 holes.

Marvel Golf Machine To Be Demonstrated

The golf marvel of the age—a machine that can do everything a champion golfer can do, only better—will be shown members of Congressional Country Club and friends Sunday afternoon between 4 and 6 o'clock.

The demonstrator has a driving machine tha will drive balls up to 400 yards, all carry; another machine that will chip balls up to 150 yards with deadly accuracy. It will even putt balls into the cups. Also there is an X-ray machine which shows the make-up of the balls and a compression machine, a guillotine and other interesting devices. In other words you will see a robot-manned golfer.

Aintree Win Expected by Bostwick

Owner Confident He'll be First American to Win on Own Horse.

Mount Given Excellent Chance of Winning Steeplechase.

By the United Press.

LONDON, March 24. — If confidence alone were enough to win the Grand National Steeplechase, the race might as well be called off and the winner's share awarded to tiny Pete Bostwick, American gentleman jockey.

Bostwick, who barely can see over the head of his big Irish jumper, Castle Irwell, was optimistic today as he discussed his chances of becoming the first American owner ever to ride his own horse to victory in the famed jumping event Friday at Aintree.

"I think I stand an excellent chance," he said. "The horse is very fit. That baby has come a great distance since last year when he fell with only a few more jumps to go."

Has no Plan for Race.

Bostwick said he was in top-notch condition, too. He hasn't used any regular method of training, but has worked daily on the estate of Ivor Anthony, trainer of the Bostwick stables, at Wroughton, Wilstshire.

"No, I have no special plans on how to run the race," he said. "What happens is largely a matter of luck because you have to watch—and avoid—fallen or riderless horses. I'll have plenty to do to get that big Irish nag over those jumps."

If Bostwick wins it will be the first owner-ridden victory in 53 years and the first American triumph since 1933 when Mrs. Ambrose Clark's Kellsboro Jack won.

Bostwick's 8-year-old Irish-bred horse, which he picked up several years ago for a song, has raced twice this year with Pete up. Quoted fourth in the betting for Friday's event at 100-6, Irwell earned that spot by his showing in those races.

Horse Has Come Along.

In a minor jump held early in March, Irwell started a red-hot favorite in a mediocre field. But Bostwick's lack of training resulted in the horse maneuvering too near the edge of the course and he balked at a fence and "ran out."

Pete brought him back and finished well behind the field. But the stewards fined him $125 for continuing a race after the horse ran out.

"Heck, I didn't know about that," Pete said. "Over in America you're allowed to finish regardless of what happens."

Handball Postponed.

The 1936 District A. A. U. handball championships have been postponed one week and will start next Monday on the Y. M. C. A. courts. Entries will close at 6 p. m. Friday at the Y. M. C. A. The finals are slated for Saturday, April 4.

Athletics to Release Walter Johnson, Jr.

Father's Prediction Son Has 5 Years to Go Is Borne Out

By the Associated Press.

FORT MYERS, Fla., March 24.—Walter Johnson, jr., son of the "Big Train" of baseball pitching fame, will be cut off from the Philadelphia Athletics April 10.

Connie Mack, Athletics' manager, said today Johnson would "drop off" the club's train at Washington on the way North from the training camp.

Les Butcher, another pitcher, who came to Florida with Johnson, also will be dropped off at Washington, and Stanley Bolton, of Texas, will be given his unconditional release.

The decision to drop Walter, jr., bears out the prediction of his father when the youngster first joined the Athletics. At that time, the "Big Train" said the lad was still five years away from the majors.

Bradenton, Fla., March 24 (AP).—Paul Dean may know what to do with his arm when he plows that high hard one through, but his thumb was working poorly today when he tried hitch-hiking.

Hurrying to join the St. Louis Cardinals at their spring training camp here, Paul flew from Dallas to Tampa. The plane carrying the young right-hander was forced down at Birmingham, but he found another to fly him to Tampa.

There he walked to the highway to catch a ride to the Red Bird camp, but all cars refused to stop for him.

He called a cab, which brought him to Bradenton.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 24. (AP).—George Earnshaw, veteran hurler, and Tom Baker, a promising rookie, combined today to stop the New York Yankees' attack with one hit as the Brooklyn Dodgers whipped the American League club, 3 to 0.

Earnshaw, who started the game, hurled four perfect innings before he retired. Baker, off whom Dixie Walker got the only Yankee hit, gave up four bases on balls in the five innings he was on the mound. Walker's hit came in the seventh and was an infield blow, which he just managed to beat to first.

Lefty Gomez yielded two of the Dodgers' five hits and one unearned run in the five innings he worked. The other hits and runs were made at the expense of Walter Brown, with Buddy Hassett, Brooklyn rookie first baseman, driving in the two tallies in the seventh.

Lakeland, Fla., March 24 (AP).—Clarence (Red) Phillips, big right-hander from Beaumont, practically assured himself of an early-season assignment with the Detroit Tigers today when he turned in a victory over the Boston Bees, 4 to 3.

Working the last five innings, Phillips limited the Bees to two hits, one tainted, and walked not a man. He also contributed a hit in the ninth which sent the tying run across.

Tampa, Fla., March 24 (AP).—Connie Mack sent Kelley the whole route against Cincinnati today and, while the young pitcher held the Reds to five hits, his wildness and his team-mates' errors combined to give Cincinnati a 5-to-4 victory over Philadelphia, it was the Reds' fourth exhibition game win over the Athletics.

Globe Refiners, Basketball Champions, Meet Rinaldi Tuesday

Kansas Aces, Rinaldis To Meet

A. A. U. Champs to Play Tailors in Tech High Gym.

THE Globe Refiners, of McPherson, Kans., National A. A. U. basketball champions, are coming to town next Tuesday night.

These Missouri Valley giants, hailed as the greatest team in the world, and the team likely to represent America in the Olympic games in Berlin, will meet Rinaldi Tailors at Tech High School's gym.

Record Crowd.

This game looms as the biggest amateur attraction in local history and Chairman Johnson and his committee anticipate a record crowd.

McPherson, which has won something like 60 games this season, defeated an all-star New York college five in Madison Square Garden a few weeks ago before 8,000 spectators. Favorites to win the National A. A. U. crown last week at Denver, the towering, burly Kansans swept aside the best teams in the land, conquering Universal Pictures in the finals.

Rinaldi Tailors also were present in Denver, got a glimpse of this smooth-working McPherson basketball machinery in three games, and came home saying, "There isn't a team in the world that can touch 'em." The Tailors got along famously in the tournament, bowling over the Indiana champions, Nohlitt Sparks, of Columbus, but ran into the big Denver Safeway Stores in the third round, losing 40 to 18.

Little Bit Tall.

Every man on the McPherson team is 6 feet 2 or more. Joe Fortenberry, thrice All-American center, is 6 feet 8. Other giants on the squad are Willard Schmidt, Francis Johnson, Vernon Vaughn, Tux Gibbons, Bill Wheatley, Jack Ragland, Harry Dowd and Charlie Bailey.

Coach Davey Keppel will muster his forces by Thursday for a workout. Hal Kiesel, Bernie Lieb, Bobby Lucas, Ollie Tipton, Carroll Shore, Sammy Hook, Cliff Keyser, Pickles Walker and Bill Noonan, who made the trip to Denver, will make up the Rinaldi team.

35 Out for Baseball At Mt. Rainier High

Mount Rainier High School issued the call for baseball aspirants yesterday with 35 men seeking to gain regular berths by the time of the opening game of the Prince Georges County scholastic baseball series, April 28.

Coach Perry O. Wilkinson has five regulars and three capable subs from last year's squad. They are George Taylor, catcher; James MacGregor, first baseman; Lawrence Lauk, second baseman; Tillie Scott, shortstop, and Steve Miller, third baseman. The three subs, who saw considerable action last year, are Edgar Shinn, pitcher; Earl Miller, pitcher, and Leo Baldwin, catcher.

Boys who will be working hard to land first-team jobs are Steve Ager, Donald Adams, Larry Finn, Edgar Shinn, Earl Miller and Vernon Todd, pitchers. Paul Fullerton is the only lad contesting James MacGregor for the first base berth. Malcolm Lynch and Leo Baldwin, catchers; Latimer Miller, Lawrence Lauk, Harry Wynn, Bartlett Dorr, Leonard Henry and Alfred Chrolinger, second basemen; Tillie Scott and Frank Landolt, shortstop; Billy Weidman and Steve Miller, third basemen; William Schultze, Thomas Newell, Kenneth Easton, Kenneth Taylor, Douglas Wilson, Richard Klopher, Ray Rutherford, Mark Skinner and James Miller, outfielders.

Resettlement Five Wins League Title

Led by Gene Augusterfer, former university star, the Resettlement courtmen won the Government Basketball League championship last night in the Central Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, defeating Investigation, 26 to 13.

The Settlers jumped into an early lead and were neither tied nor headed throughout. It was 3 to 2 at the end of the first quarter, 13 to 6 at the half and 20 to 9 with one period to go.

In the three Resettlement-Investigation games this season, the figure 13 predominated. Resettlement won the first game 27 to 13, the second game 23 to 13 and last night kept the G-Men to their usual quota while amassing twice 13 points.

Settlers Represent 'Y' in Tournament

The Resettlement Basketball Team, who won the Government League championship, will represent the Washington "Y" in the first annual interstate tournament to be held at the Wilmington (Del.) Y. M. C. A. next Saturday.

Other "Y" teams in the competition are Baltimore, Hagerstown and Wilmington. Wilmington emerged victorious in the tournament held at the local "Y" on George Washington's Birthday.

Pee-Wees Win 20 to 6.

Aided by Mike O'Brien's home run and hurling, the St. Joseph Pee-Wees swamped the Second Street Tigers, 20 to 6, yesterday on the Terminal Diamond. It was the first game of the season for both clubs.

Congressional Golfers, Joined By Peacock, Expect Big Year

By Dave Herman.

ASK any dyed-in-the-wool golfer at Congressional Country Club what he thinks of his course, and he'll tell you "it's three shots tougher than any other course around town."

The fact remains that no player ever has broken 70 in a competitive medal round, and some good men have played over this biting, testing 6,700-yard layout. Luther Steward, jr., now a member at Columbia, holds the official amateur mark with a 71, one under par, and Professional Roland Mackenzie, with a 68, owns the noncompetitive record for the revamped course. Tommy Armour once shot a 63 on the old course. Mackenzie is beginning his third year as club professional.

But if one is to take the words of some of the old-timers at Congressional, there are going to be some scorching rounds at the course this season.

Why? Well, the main reason is that Roger Peacock, District champion, who twice scored 62s at Indian Spring, his old hawking grounds, now is a member.

Thrice Peacock has qualified for the National Amateur. Last season at Cleveland he went to the fourth round before losing to Eddie Held. Of course, Peacock's golf will be of a week-end nature, save for the big championships, but a good player doesn't have to keep whacking 'em every day to keep in stride.

Peacock will be in fast company. Two youngsters, Billy Dettweiler, 18, twice former National Amateur qualifier, and Billy Shea, 17, District junior and schoolboy champion, have passed the stage-fright age. They are ready to trim the best.

Charlie Pettijohn, a New Yorker, now attending Georgetown, has joined the club. He was a star in prep school. Ken Corcoran and Jim Lee, both of Georgetown, also play at the course.

Among the veterans to be reckoned with are M. Parker Nolan, the long-driving club champion; Jim Maloney, Frank Goodwin, Dr. Howard Smith, Troy Carmichael, "Whirling Bill Wenzel, Dr. John Shugrue, Dr. Bob Keilty, Carl Weigel, Dr. Don Johnson and "All Weather" Jack McCarron. These men bat in the low and middle 70s and slap out an occasional 68 or 69.

They have some outstanding women players, too, at the club. Helen Dettweiler, who recently returned from her Florida campaign, was runner-up in the Middle Atlantic championship last year. She is the District junior champion, and one of our best prospects.

Mrs. Betty Mackenzie, the pro's wife, is the club champion. She has lopped 10 strokes off her game. Mrs. J. Marvin Haynes, former Middle Atlantic and District champion, is a new member, and should add much strength to the women's first team. Mrs. J. F. Dowdall and Mrs. J. O. Rhyne are other topnotch players.

A. A. U. Swim Renews Old Rivalries

11 Champions Among 70 to Vie This Week-End at Shoreham Pool.

OLD rivalries will be conspicuous in the annual District A. A. U. indoor swimming championships to be held Friday and Saturday nights in the shimmering Shoreham Pool. Against a field of 70 entrants, 11 champions will defend their titles and their efforts promise to churn the waters of the pool.

The men's spring championships should prove thrillers, for Buddy Hodgson, of the Shoreham, and Joe LaSalle, of George Washington University, face some tough opposition in their 50-yard and 100-yard events, respectively. Both will be out to cop the double sprint title, but Alex McMillan and Justine Farrell, of the Central Y. M. C. A., loom in the paths of both.

Ann Bono, of the Shoreham, is favored to retain her 50-yard free-style title in the women's events and Rita Augusterfer her 100 and 200 yard championships, despite the spirited competition of Jean Rawls and others.

Boggs Meets Smith.

Ernie Boggs, of the "Y," however, faces the threat of Don Smith, young Western High speedster, to retain his 220-yard free-style championship. Bob Jordan, Central High's record-breaker, is not entered in the meet due to scholastic difficulties, thus leaving the 100-yard and 220-yard events open.

The men's breast-stroke championships bring together Morris and Goldberg, of Western, and Paul Wilson, of the "Y," as the favored contenders for the title won by Dyer Ghormley last year. Margaret Hoffman, former Olympic swimmer, is virtually certain to lift the women's 100-yard breast-stroke championship from Marianna Trowbridge, of the Shoreman.

2 Local Pros Shoot Below Par Rounds

Sub-par golf was in full bloom yesterday.

Two well-known District professionals, Danny Burton, of Army and Navy, and Leo Walper, Bethesda driving range professor, licked par on separate fronts.

Burton, playing with Capt. R. J. Rogers, at Army and Navy, shot a 69, 3 under par, coming within a shot of tying J. Monro Hunter's course mark.

Both scores were the lowest made at either course this season.

Six birdies were recorded by Burton. He missed putts of less than a foot on the seventh and seventeenth and 3-putted the twelfth. Monday the red-haired pro shot a 33 on the outgoing side, and thus is 6 under par for two days.

Walper had a brace of 34's. Jamison scored a 72 and Good an 81.

Shortage of Softball Fields Forecast for 100 Teams Here

A NEED for softball diamonds in Washington was forecast last night by Winfree Johnson, commissioner of softball in the District, at a well-attended meeting of city league representatives. Commissioner Johnson advised all leagues to make early application at the permit office of the National Capital Parks for fields. Johnson is also assistant director of the National Capital Parks.

Eleven leagues and seven independent teams were represented. The leagues were Prince Georges County, Interbureau of Department of Agriculture, Government, Pepco Employes Association, Department of Commerce, Sunday Morning, Veterans' Bureau, Navy Yard, District Building, Georgetown, Rosedale and Sherwood Playgrounds.

The Interbureau League predicted it would have 2 teams competing; Prince Georges County, at least 4 teams; Government, 10; Pepco, 6; Commerce, 6; Navy Yard, 24; District Building, 6, and the three playgrounds, 18 teams. Assistant Commissioner David C. Adamson advised leagues to open their schedules at the end of April and to end the season by August 15.

Independent teams represented included National Labor Relations Board, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Agriculture, D. C. Paper Co., Ehrlich Poultry, WPA and Fairway.

H. W. Phillips and Charlie Edwards, representing the District Umpires Association, announced that their organization will allow its members to officiate at softball games providing such service does not interfere with their regular baseball duties.

Shea Is Named Scholastic Golf Head

Schoolboy Association Elects Buddy Sharkey Vice President.

BILLY SHEA, 17-year-old Western High School golf captain, was elected president of the District Scholastic Golf Association at its annual meeting at Washington Hotel last night.

Dates of May 22, 23, 24 for the District Schoolboy Championship, with Indian Spring, Kenwood and Congressional as scenes, were approved. The Washington Post donates the individual trophy. It was decided to have a runner-up flight in this year's tournament.

Two new schools were welcomed into the association. They were Eastern and Woodrow Wilson. Eleven schools were represented.

Frank Emmet, Georgetown Prep golf director, presided. Others who spoke were Al Treder, of Manor, Middle Atlantic P. G. A. president; Olaf Saugstad, of Tech; John Byerly, of Devitt; C. Dweight Bracken, of Devitt; C. M. Ray, of Central, and Dave Herman, of The Post.

The Prep School League season will open April 3, while the high schools will begin play April 4.

Junior events—May 9, 16, 17, Maryland Scholastic championship at Hillendale; May 22, 23, 24, District Scholastic at Indian Spring, Kenwood and Congressional; May 30, Father and Son championship at Georgetown Prep; District Junior, June 23, 24, 25, at Woodmont; Maryland State Father and Son at Five Farms; Maryland State Junior, June 30, at Roland Park; National Interscholastic at Greenwich, Conn., June 23, 24, 25, 26.

Mid-Atlantic Polo League Is Planned

Carlisle, Pa., March 24.—An effort is being made to organize a Middle Atlantic polo league which would include eight teams from Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland, it was learned today. Teams expected to join the league are Middleburg, Quantico Marines, and Fort Belvoir, all of Virginia; the 110th Field Artillery from Pikesville, Md.; Hagerstown, Fort Hoyle, all of Maryland; Carlisle Army Post, and the Fort Lowther Club, of Camp Hill, Pa.

Team officials will meet in Washington, D. C., early next month to discuss plans for the coming season.

John Jamison, jr., of Hagerstown, a member of the Hagerstown quartet, is in charge of plans. Officers are expected to be elected at the next meeting and tentative schedules will probably be drawn up, it was revealed.

Names Mean Something In California's Polo

John DeBlois Wack who plays for the Brandywine team has established a ball-whacking reputation rivaled only by the wallops of Oliver Wallop of the San Mateo four.

Looking Pretty For and Getting the Birdie

Mr. Huck Stahl, in the background, assumes his best Hollywood pose for the cameraman as Mr. William Shelton lays it on the second-base line as he slid into the bag during a workout of the Heurich Brewers yesterday. The boys are only fooling, of course, and so are we. Huck will play shortstop for the Brewers this season, while Shelton will hold down second.

Tunney to See Ring Tourney At Virginia

By the Associated Press.

UNIVERSITY, Va., March 24.—Gene Tunney, retired heavyweight boxing champion of the world, will be among the spectators for the semifinal and final bouts of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament and Olympic team semifinal trials at the University of Virginia on Friday and Saturday, James G. Driver, tournament chairman, announced today.

Driver, Virginia graduate manager, said he had been notified today that Tunney will come by train from Florida to Richmond, where he will be joined Saturday morning by Virginia alumni and motor here for the afternoon and night bouts.

Adolph Leftwich, who captained the Virginia boxers in 1924 and 1925 and who was a member of the American Olympic boxing team at the Paris games in 1924, will also be at the ringside for the tournament this week-end.

Colonial Bowlers Beat Shamrocks

The Shamrock girls' runaway race for the bowling championship of the Washington Ladies League was momentarily halted last night at the Recreation alley when they were checked twice by the Colonials. The upsets did not seriously shorten their lead, since they are still ten games ahead of their closest rival with but four more weeks to go.

A merry see-saw battle for the runner-up position is being waged between the El Gees and the Columbians. Tied for second place last week, the deadlock was snapped last night when the El Gees succeeded in humbling the Vee Bees three games while the Columbians were taking a 2-1 licking from the Cardinals. Capt. Lorraine Gulli featured the El Gees rise to the contending position with a 138 game and 387 set. In turning back the Nomads the odd game, the Beeques spilled 1,517 maples for the top set of the night.

Scott Will Tangle With Classy Foe

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE posed picture which you see above is not the way the Heurich Brewers play ball. It does, in its way, however, show that the Brewers, Industrial League champions, took their first workout of the season yesterday over on a vacant lot back of the brewery.

Shortstop Huck Stahl and Second Baseman Bill Shelton were much more active than you see them in the above photograph and you wouldn't have known it was the first workout if they hadn't told you. Capt. Fee Collier and Manager Bill Flester were hovering around the squad as if it were a brood of chickens. On paper, it looks as though it will be a pretty fast brood of chickens this coming season.

Capt. Collier, however, is not so optimistic. The Brewers "will have a tough time" to win the championship again, the veteran catcher-captain relates.

"We need pitchers," he says. "Walter James is the only pitcher we have from last season."

It seems Reggie Brown, who shared the twirling with James last season, has cast his lot with Coffey Sales. The Brewers are negotiating for an addition to the mound staff which may make Mr. James less lonesome before the season starts April 27 with Miller Furniture.

Contrary to the general belief, the Heurich Brewers work at the Heurich Brewery, that is, all of them except Third Baseman Otts Zahn, who is working for his master's degree at G. W. Working in a beer factory serves two purposes. Out of season it is very entertaining and in season it is a great test of the will power in order to keep in condition. Thus the team has a very strong morale as well as a strong batting order.

A bottle explosion nearly cost the team its second baseman a few days ago. Second Baseman Shelton supervises the bottling at the beer establishment and his left hand was involved in the explosion. Three fingers were badly gashed enough to require four stitches but, after all, you can't even see it in the above picture.

The line-up this season will read about as follows: James in the box and Collier behind the bat; Eddie Radtke, first base; Shelton, second; Zahn, third; Stahl, shortstop; Dick Knight, Everett Russell and Huck Hilleary in the outfield and Ralph Benny on call.

Pete Hits Two Homers As Generals Win, 7-4

Out Fishin' . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

ANGLERS fortunate enough to make a trip to Florida last winter to participate in the 26 variety fishing contest will be interested to know that since the close of the recent Silver Sailfish Derby many of the holders of prize-winning fish are watching other entries forge to the front with bigger ones.

W. R. Skinner, of South Royalton, Vt., who took the lead in the sailfish length class many weeks ago with an 8-foot 6-inch entry, saw his fish beaten by several entries in the derby, but since duplicate entries were not permitted he is still "tops."

Irving H. Lyon, New York, changed the reading in the barracuda race with a 31-pound entry, and Harry T. Miller, Lakeville, Conn., went into second place with a 30-pounder. John J. McCormick, New York, practically cinched the grouper prize with an 87-pound beauty which made the 62-pounder entered by Gordon Lynn, Oyster Bay, look like a fryer.

Another change this week gave Ernest Kanzler, Detroit, the king-fish division lead when he caught a 40-pound battler and broke a tie between Jack Hunt, Baldwin, N. J., and Thomas Banham, Tuxedo Park, who had 32-pound entries.

Surprisingly, the marlin honors changed hands several times during last week, and the bacon may go to Gene Raymond, famous California movie star, who landed an 80-pounder. Sportsmen at West Palm Beach pick up marlin, with but few exceptions, only in trailing sailfish bait and at lower pace than is used in Bimini waters.

The sailfish score has been pushed up to more than 2,000 since that time, meaning, of course, that many white flags were flown and a majority of the sailfish released.

Many returned to Washington with the poorest luck in history and with tales of the rapidly diminishing supply of Florida game fish, excepting off the Keys, where they are still plentiful and full of fight.

Strong easterly winds combined with low water temperatures, due to the severe winter, are given by old skippers as the alibi for poor fishing. Only 4 out of 12 local anglers interviewed by the writer claimed exceptionally good results on their trip. It is interesting to note that they visited Florida waters during the month of February, early, when the sailfish seemed most abundant.

Speaking of records, our own Chesapeake Bay is in a class by itself. The gamiest of all salt-water fish, pound for pound, is the bluefish, conceded by the majority of fair-minded anglers. The largest bluefish caught in the United States during 1935 was landed in the Chesapeake. It weighed 13½ pounds and was caught by a doctor (name withheld because of a national contest sponsored by a sportsman magazine which is entitled to make the announcement at the proper time). The second largest fish (blue) was taken by a local angler at Oregon Inlet last May, weighing 12 pounds 3 ounces. The largest bluefish ever caught with rod and reel weighed 25 pounds, 42 inches in length, landed at Cohasset Narrows, Mass., on June 16, 1874, by L. Hathaway. It has been a great many years since bluefish weighing 15 pounds or more have been taken anywhere.

Alexandrians To See Ohio Play G. W.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., March 24.—Alexandria baseball fans will get their first glimpse of the diamond sport this season Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when George Washington University and Ohio State University meet in Baggett's Stadium.

Episcopal High School officials announced today that opening of the spring athletic season would be postponed for two more weeks, because of spring vacation. Initial practices in baseball and track were listed for this afternoon.

Record 'C' Club Entry Promised

The biggest Central "C" Club track and field meet in the 18-year history of the event is promised for the schoolboy classic on May 16, according to the number of entries announced last night by Steven Porter, chairman of the tourney committee.

A new president of the powerful Central graduate body also took office last night following the resignation of Parkins Birthright, newly elected executive. Jimmy Hance, '25 vice president, succeeded Birthright who accepted a position with the Railroad Retirement Board which duties he felt would prevent him giving satisfactory attention to the "C" Club.

Already eclipsing the number of schools entered last year, a field of 22 schools has accepted invitations to compete, the largest number since the meet was founded. A total of 17 schools participated last year. Representing the 22 schools, a field of 350 individuals has already been filed.

Chairman Porter reports that the entry list of schools will be swelled by possibly ten more institutions. The list announced yesterday includes schools from all sections of Virginia and Maryland as well as the District.

The 22 schools named to date follow: Greenbrier Military School, Lewisburg, Va.; Washington-Lee High, Roosevelt High, Baltimore City College, McKinley Tech, Western High, Mount St. Joseph's High, Baltimore; Episcopal High, Alexandria; Catonsville High, Baltimore; Bethesda-Chevy Chase High, Baltimore Polytechnic, Bel Air (Md.) High, Newport News High, Towson (Md.) High, Richard Montgomery High, Rockville, Md.; Staunton Military Academy, Fork Union Military Academy, Massanutten Military, Gaithersburg (Md.) High, Central High and Montgomery Blair High, Eastern High.

Challenges Cue Artists.

Leon Yonders, the masked marvel, will give any one $5 who can trim him in a match at George's Billiard Parlors, Second and D streets southeast. Last night in a "challenge all comers" match Yonders defeated Allen Bell, 50 to 15.

WITH the entire gate receipts to go to the American Red Cross for distribution to flood sufferers in Washington and nearby Maryland, an all-star amateur boxing show will be presented tonight at the Turner Arena, beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

In the feature of the dozen bouts, which involve the best amateur talent of Richmond and this city, Lou Gevinson, generally conceded to be the outstanding featherweight ever developed locally, is slated to sling leather with Johnny Routson, 126-pound Virginia State champion.

Other promising scraps pit John L. Sullivan, 118-pound Richmond Golden Gloves titlist, against George Pickeral, of the Olympic A. C.; Hunter Crostic, Richmond's great 160-pounder, against Creighton Allen, winner of 17 consecutive bouts, and Bob Mathias against Steve Mamakos in the 147-pound class.

This is one of the few 100 per cent benefit shows ever presented in Washington. Promoter Joe Turner merits a salvo of applause for offering his arena and his staff without charge. The Federal Government is co-operating in the worthy cause by waiving the usual 10 per cent amusement tax, thus making it possible to sell tickets at a flat rate of $1 and $2.

112 pounds—Sammy Fusco (N. E. B. C.) vs. Vic DeList (W. B. C.); Buster Mills (W. B. C.) vs. Pete Reilly (Police Club).

118 pounds—George Pickeral (Olympic A. C.) vs. John L. Sullivan (Richmond); Jim Koustenas (W. B. C.) vs. Preston Drew (Terminal Y).

160 pounds—Creighton Allen (N. E. B. C.) vs. Hunter Crostic (Richmond).

175 pounds—George Cox (Merrick Club) vs. Jim King (Olympic A. C.).

Eastern to Face Collegiate Stars

The leading scorers of the recent interhigh school basketball series, Chick Hollidge and Lavelle Dean, of Eastern High School, will match wares with the two highest scorers in local collegiate circles, Bill Mitchell and Pete Fox, of Wilson Teachers, tonight at Tech High School when Eastern clashes with the prospective schoolmasters.

An important preliminary game will be played at 8 o'clock between Luckett's Pharmacy and the Flying Eagles, who are embroiled in a dispute over the Community Minor League championship. Tonight's game will be the second of the three-game series, and victory for the Eagles will clinch the bunting as they won the first encounter.

Hollyhock Takes 2d Race in Row in Florida

C. V. Whitney Filly Takes First Mile

Bootless Second and War Games Third, Winners Short Priced.

By the Associated Press.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., March 24.—The famous light blue and brown banner of C. V. Whitney was much in evidence here today, as were short-priced winners. Hollyhock, 3-year-old daughter of Blue Larkspur, won the Marlin Purse to give the New York sportsman a double and favorite players their fourth success in five races. Closing at $5.30 for $2, the Whitney filly won by 3 lengths for her second straight triumph.

E. R. Bradley's Bootless was just as easily second over Mrs. G. S. Preece's War Games. Hollyhock was essaying a mile for the first time. She covered the distance in the good time of 1:37 1-5 under a mere 100 pounds, which included the leading local rider, Apprentice Ira (Babe) Hanford. It was the Omaha lad's twelfth score of the meeting.

Fred J. Ryan's Sachem and Bootless were close second and third choices, respectively, to the winner. The former never could improve over third position and relinquished that end of the purse to War Games in the last few strides.

Hanford had Hollyhock away like the wind. The bay filly dispelled any doubt as to her ability to negotiate the 8 furlongs. Joe Renick rode Bootless hard trying to cut down the winner's margin, plying his whip around the final bend for a futile cause. Hollyhock went on about her business to triumph as if much the best.

Minneapolis Wins Over Nats, 5 to 4

3-2 with singles in the third and Bean, who was permitting few liberties with his pitching now, tied the score with his homer in the fourth.

Another Cast-Off.

In the last five innings, the Nats met up with another of their cast-off pitchers, Ray Prim, and sweet was Prim's revenge on the team that had snubbed his services. After yielding Washington a run in the fifth on singles by Powell and Travis that followed a walk, Prim held 'em hitless for three innings before giving up a single in the ninth.

Billy Starr, in the Washington line-up for the first time this season, revived the Nats' ebbing hopes in the ninth when he singled with one out. Bobby Estalella, sent in to pinch hit, walked, and the situation appeared promising, particularly after Pinch Hitter Carl Reynolds whacked a terrific line drive to centerfield. But it was a futile gesture, because Spencer Harris galloped into the vicinity and pulled it down with a full-tilt running catch.

Buddy Lewis left the tying and winning runs on second and first respectively when he bounced into a force play at second base engineered by Blondy Ryan, the guy whose fielding beat the Nats in the 1933 World Series.

Another item in the defeat of the Nats was those three double plays that Johnny Stone managed to bat into on various trips to the plate.

DEAR AL: SELECTIONS AT TROPICAL PARK.

The Benningites made me wade through the largest stack of mail since the contest started when they swamped me on Monday's program. Perhaps it looked like an easy card, but it proved a stickler for most of the customers and Bill Bennings. Some 300 had me whipped when the final check-up was made and the day cost me four day passes to Bowie instead of the usual two. The only persons to pick five winners were F. H. Baasen and Maurice Hoffman, jr., and, furthermore, they picked the same horses—Lorraine S., Mucho Gusto, Miss Subway, Shot Up and Miss Purray. I'm giving them both daily prizes. As usual, every winner drew a play from the contestants and, naturally, Monon Lad, the $83.70 shot, proved the biggest stumbling block. However, eight of the contestants included the long one in their selections. The race for the grand prizes of two season badges to the Bowie meeting and one season badge remains the same. Malcolm Dickey, with seven winners, and M. S. Bush, with six winners, are still heading the parade. The Benningites have four more chances to top Dickey and Bush not to speak of adding further to my humiliation. T. B. White suggests a "booby prize" inasmuch as he has picked only five winners since the contest began. That's out, because I would hate to have to carry off that honor. Read the rules, send in your slips and get them in early, folks. BILL.

First race—Center March, withdrawn the other day when a stablemate won, may make his presence felt here to the extent of a set of brackets. He gets in with only steadying weight and draws Hanford for the saddle assignment. Creole Bird is rounding into shape and may be second again. Sassafras is a possible surprise.

Second race—Jackful and Krona should battle it out for this purse and I expect them to finish in the order named. Genesis may be a keen factor.

Third race—Addis Ababa, brisk worker, may fancy the No. 1 post position and run off with this purse. Maestrom looms as the one to beat. Lovely Day has a fighting chance.

Fourth race—Tenlaw seems to have found the spot for graduation purposes. This one favors the mile and if Garner rides he will be in capable hands. Gay Dog and Exaggeration for the other awards.

Fifth race—Phildia carries a heavy impost of 119 pounds, but I see no reason for mistakes in this sort of company. Fake and Jack Snipe for the place and show awards.

Sixth race—Crinoline and Brilliant Light shape up as the best of this group. Both are fit and they should put up a keen struggle. Joan D. may take it all. She favors the distance.

Seventh race—Fair Countess and Bender First to do the chief running in this event. The former gets a nice shift in the weights. Sun Camp, assigned only 100 pounds, may be a threat.

Best bet—Tenlaw.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, FAST.

FIRST RACE—Six furlongs; claiming. Purse, $700. For 4-year-olds and upward. Went to post at 2:20. Off at 2:22. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Winner, Mrs. Thomas J. Deford's ch. m. (5), by Kal Im. Trained by Thomas J. Debord. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:11 2-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
CHINESE EMPRESS	(Wright)	111	6	1	1²	1²	1²	1¹	1⁴	$0.75
TOANO	(Lynch)	111	2	3	2½	2²	2²	2²	2¾	3.90
ZULU LAD	(Greer)	111	4	6	5ʰ	5²	3½	3ʰ²	3⁵	3.50

SMEAR	(Stafford)	108	3	7	7	7	7	7	7	17.00

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHINESE EMPRESS, $3.50, $2.40, $2.20; TOANO, $2.50, $2.20; ZULU LAD, $2.20.

CHINESE EMPRESS sprinted into an easy lead, was steadied in front and was never extended to win with much in reserve. TOANO followed closest to the winner from the beginning, but could not threaten at any time during the running. ZULU LAD, slower than usual to settle in his stride, slipped through on the inside in the last five-sixteenths and closed stoutly.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700. For 3-year-old maidens. Went to post at 2:53. Off at 2:53½. Start good (chute). Won easily; place driving. Winner, C. Oil Whitney's ch. f. (3), by Messenger—Super Rock. Trained by J. A. Healey. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:12.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
SINGER'S FOLLY	(Wright)	120	6	3	1⁴	1½	1	1¹	1¹½	$0.85
LETTER BOX	(Fallon)	110	3	1	3¹	3½	2ʰ	2⁴	2⁴	14.60

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SINGER'S FOLLY, $3.70, $2.60, $2.20; LETTER BOX, $5.60, $3.50; BYRDRYE, $6.50.

SINGER'S FOLLY moved into the lead in first quarter mile, opened up a winning lead when reaching the turn, saved ground and held away to the end to win nicely in hand. LETTER BOX, away fast and kept within striking distance of the leaders, finished courageously when placed to punishment, but was no match for the winner. BYRDRYE, dropped far back after the start, settled in her stride and came full of run after circling her field.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs; claiming. Purse, $700. For 3-year-olds and upward. Went to post at 3:24. Off at 3:25½. Start good (chute). Won driving; place same. Winner, John D. Spreckels III ch. g. (7), by Donna Cona—Dearie. Trained by G. R. Yeargin. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:11 2-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
DORNOCH	(Wimmer)	112	5	5	5²	2²	2½	1ʰ²	1³	$13.90
BROADSWORD	(Steffen)	120	6	1	1¹	1¹	1ʰ	2¹	1³	1.00
BELIEVER	(Kastner)	111	2	6	7⁵	6½	4ʰ	3¹	3²	12.70

FLOWERY LADY	(Stafford)	106	7	8	8	8	8	7²	5½	22.30
MOANE KEALA	(Greer)	110	1	4	2ʰ	3½	5ʰ	6ʰ	7	7.50
SHERBERT BOY	(McAtee)	116	8	2	4ʰ	5¹	6⁶	7⁴	8	8.25
DIVERTING	(Smith)	111	4	7	6½	7⁴	8	8		32.60

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DORNOCH, $29.80, $8.40, $5.90; BROADSWORD, $3.30, $2.40; BELIEVER, $4.70.

DORNOCH, in thick of contention in the early racing, rallied gamely when forced to a drive, responded to severe punishment during the final drive and wore BROADSWORD down right at the end. BROADSWORD was hurried into the lead, shook off MOANE KEALA and AIRLINE, saved ground when the final test came, but could not withstand the winner. BELIEVER, slow to gain his best stride, secured racing room on the inside when improving his position and was racing strongly at the close.

FOURTH RACE—Four furlongs; claiming. Purse, $700. For 2-year-olds. Went to post at 3:59. Off at 4:03½. Start good. Won driving; place same. Winner, William J. Hirsch's dk. ch. f. (2), by Happy Argo—Modification. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:47 2-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	Start	¼	Stretch	Finish	Straight
CONSERVATIVE	(Seabo)	115	2	2	2²	2²	1½	$0.80
COSETTE	(Bryson)	113	1	1	1½	1ʰ	2³	2.00
LEGION	(J. Renick)	112	4	4	4½	4¹	3¹½	10.05
GUMPTION	(Dabson)	109	5	6	6	5¹½	4²½	21.55
SQUARE	(Steffen)	111	3	3	3¹	3²	5⁴	14.95
TALE OF WOE	(Wright)	110	6	5	5	6	6	20.05

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CONSERVATIVE, $3.60, $2.40, $2.20; COSETTE, $3.00, $2.30; LEGION, $2.40.

CONSERVATIVE, abreast of the pacemaker from the beginning, rallied to punishment in the last quarter-mile, lost ground when carried out at the stretch turn, but finished determinedly and was up in the last sixteenth. COSETTE, displaying good speed after taking command shortly after the start, carried the winner wide entering the home-stretch, but continued stoutly until the close. LEGION was hard ridden all the way and finished gamely.

FIFTH RACE—One mile; allowances. Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-olds. Went to post at 4:33. Off at 4:35½. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Winner, C. V. Whitney's b. f. (3), by Blue Larkspur—Pamfleta. Trained by John A. Healey. Value to winner, $725; second, $175; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 1:36 1-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
HOLLYHOCK	(I. Hanford)	100	2	1	1¹	1¹	1¹½	1¹½	1²½	$1.65
BOOTLESS	(J. Renick)	109	5	5	2²	2²	2²	2²	2³	2.30
WAR GAMES	(Steffen)	112	4	4	4¹	4ʰ	4½	4¹	3ʰ	17.50
SACHEM	(Wright)	110	1	2	3¹½	3¹½	3ʰ	3ʰ	4¹½	2.20
SWEET GUINEA	(Fallon)	99	3	3	5	5	5	5	5	12.70

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HOLLYHOCK, $5.30, $3.00, $2.30; BOOTLESS, $3.80, 43.00; WAR GAMES, 23.80.

HOLLYHOCK outran her field to the first turn, was steadied in front until reaching the homestretch, was shaken up during the final stages and drew out smartly. BOOTLESS was hurried into a contending position, offered good contention, but was not good enough when the real test came. WAR GAMES was under strong ursging from the beginning, outfinished SACHEM during closing stages.

SIXTH RACE—One mile; claiming. Purse, $700. For 4-year-olds and upward. Went to post at 5:06. Off at 5:06½. Start good. Won driving; place same. Winner, C. E. Irvin's b. c. (4), by Gallant Fox—Concession. Trained by Paul Sanford. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:38 1-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
THRUSTER	(I. Hanford)	107	3	1	1ʰ	1ʰ	1ʰ	1¹	1½	$0.80
PARITY	(Stafford)	110	2	4	3²	3²	3¹	2½	2¹	4.00
KAPENA	(Westrope)	113	4	3	4¹	4¹	4¹	4¹	3ʰ	3.15
PAYRACK	(Lynch)	112	5	2	2½	2¹	2½	3¹	4²	13.40
KNIGHTS HOPE	(Greer)	107	1	5	5	5	5	5	5	17.05

Two-dollar mutuels paid—THRUSTER, $3.60, $2.30, $2.20; PARITY, $3.10, $2.20; KAPENA, $2.20.

THRUSTER, rated under steadying restraint for the first six furlongs, drew clear when shaken up at the final bend, but had to be stoutly ridden approaching the finish line. Leathstand PARITY, kept forwardly placed, pounded gamely when placed to punishment in the last five-sixteenths, and was wearing the winner down rapidly nearing the close. KAPENA saved ground all the way and outstayed PAYRACK in the final issue.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles; claiming. Purse, $700. For 4-year-olds and upward. Went to post at 5:44. Off at 5:44½. Start good. Won driving; place same. Winner, P. Mellon's b. f. (4), by Johnstown—Traffic Cop. Trained by W. A. Smith. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:46.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
PALASA	(J. Renick)	111	4	5	6	6	6	5½	1ʰ²	$9.50
HIGHEST POINT	(Lynch)	110	3	2	2ʰ	2ʰ	2¹	2¹	2¹	2.30
JUBILARGO	(Seabo)	113	2	3	1¹	1½	1ʰ²	1½	3¹½	3.70
CHATTERDOO	(I. Hanford)	105	1	1	1½	5¹	3ʰ	4¹½	4⁴	11.60
WATERSET	(Fallon)	103	5	4	3½	3½	3½	3ʰ	5ʰ	7.00
LADY GENIE	(Kastner)	104	6	6	5ʰ	4¹	4ʰ	6	6	2.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PALASA, $21.00, $7.40, $3.90; HIGHEST POINT, $3.50, $2.40; JUBILARGO, $3.30.

PALASA, lacking speed to keep up with his field in the first six furlongs, swung to the outside in the last five-sixteenths after catching up with his opponents, then closing strongly in the closing furlongs, was up in the last strides. HIGHEST POINT, rated close up in the early running, wore JUBILARGO down midway of the home-stretch and just failed to last long enough. JUBILARGO was hurried to the front, went along under slight restraint while saving ground, but weakened suddenly after reaching the homestretch.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles; claiming. Purse, $700. For 3-year-olds. Went to post at 6:22. Off at 6:23½. Start good. Won driving; place same. Winner, Robert W. Collins' b. c. (3), by Dunlis—Little Fox. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:46 4-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
STEALTH	(Bryson)	110	2	8	7	5¹½	3²	2¹½	1ʰ²	$1.35
SWEET SUSAN	(Maschek)	105	5	3	2½	2¹	2½	1ʰ	2²	26.45
TRAMWAY	(Fallon)	108	8	2	1½	1ʰ	3¹	3¹	3¹½	6.10
JERRY H.	(Malzan)	113	4	4	3ʰ	4ʰ	5ʰ	6¹	4¹½	33.55
JOAN P.	(I. Hanford)	100	1	1	6½	7	7	7	5²	6.65
LARO KEYS	(Wimmer)	109	7	1	5¹	8ʰ	6½	5¹½	6³	4.90
MASKED SMILE	(Steffen)	109	6	7	4¹	3ʰ	4ʰ	6ʰ	7	18.65
BOMBASTIC	(Dabson)	108	3	6	Lost rider					9.20

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STEALTH, $4.70, $3.20, $2.40; SWEET SUSAN, $17.60, $6.80; TRAMWAY, $3.50.

STEALTH, caught in tight quarters going to the first turn, went to the outside when straightened into the backstretch, reached the leaders at the final turn, then closed stoutly after losing ground at the stretch turn to get up in the last few strides. SWEET SUSAN, a keen factor in the early racing, disposed of TRAMWAY entering the home-stretch, saved ground and held on strongly until the close. Maschek made a claim of foul against the winner, which was not allowed. TRAMWAY had to be urged to hold the lead in the first six furlongs and weakened in the final test.

George-Managoff Go Looms As First Real Wrestling Bout

By George Considine.

MORE than a dozen "wrestling features" have been committed at the Turner Arena since its establishment last December, but the Ed (Don) George-Ivan Managoff tete-a-tete tomorrow night is the first one which promises to justify the term.

The season began, you remember, with that oh-so-bad Injun Chief (Gypsy Daniels) Chewaki, who thinks that a head scissors is a guillotine. Then came Joe Savoldi with his drop-kick and Rowdy Joe Cox and, finally, Ernie Dusek, the nastiest man of them all.

In that entire parade of hulks there never was a single match that even remotely resembled an honest-to-Gotch wrestling feature. If all the rassling ruffians who have appeared here this year could be laid end to end, that is exactly what should be done with them.

The millennium has been reached. At last Promoter Joe Turner can say he has a wrestling feature without having to stick his tongue in his cheek. Ed (Don) George's grappling ability has never been questioned, while Managoff proved he knew the ropes when he held Huge Hans Steinke to a draw several weeks ago.

Obviously sorry that a real wrestling match somehow crept into the program, the management reverts to type in a half-hour preliminary travesty involving Big George Koverly and Tiny Tom Baxter. Big George had quite a time for himself last time out. Having been whipped by Dean Detton, the big one proceeded to tear off the referee's shirt, wreck some broadcasting equipment and smash a ringsider's spectacles.

So shocked was Promoter Joe Turner by Koverly's misbehavior that he suspended him for six weeks. Koverly comes back tomorrow night with orders to restrain his enthusiasm or there will be no payoff and he (Koverly) will never work in our fair city again. Teh-tch!

Southwestern Life's Control Sold in Dallas

Businessmen of Texas City Acquire Management for $2,499,960.

Dallas, Tex., March 24.—Purchase for $2,499,960 of control in the Southwestern Life Insurance Co. by Dallas businessmen from a New York group was announced yesterday.

The purchasers agreed to pay $60 a share for 41,666 of 50,000 shares outstanding in the General American Life Insurance Co. of St. Louis to Equity Corporation.

Passage of control was automatic, as the General American owned 83⅓ per cent of the capital stock of the Texas Insurance Co.

The Southwestern Investors' Corporation, Dallas, headed by Dexter Hamilton, president, and James Ralph Wood, secretary, purchased with $100,000 cash control of the two firms, with total assets of $170,-365,313.

Hamilton, Wood, and T. C. Clark, attorney, subscribed the $100,000 for stock of the Investors' Corporation and sold $2,400,000 in 20-year debentures to Southwestern Life at par for cash.

The Investors' Corporation pledged as security for the debentures the General American stock.

Square D. Co. Holders Amend Stock Articles

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Square D Co., yesterday, the articles of incorporation were amended to reduce the capital attributable to each share of class B, non-par-value common stock, and to exchange each presently outstanding share for three shares by issuing two additional shares of such stock for each share of such stock presently outstanding.

It is expected that this amendment will become effective at the close of business April 9, entitling stockholders of record at the close of business April1, to the two additional shares of stock.

Phelps Dodge Copper Advances Base Penny

New York, March 24 (AP).—Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corporation announced today an advance of 1 cent a pound in the list base price of brass and copper pipe and some other fabricated products, effective March 27.

The advance was looked upon in trade circles as a routine step, designed to bring the price of various products in line with the prevailing quotation on copper. Phelps Dodge Corporation, the parent concern, recently advanced the price of copper from 9¼ cents to 9½ cents a pound. Some producers are still quoting 9¼ cents.

Cotton Continues Quiet Operations

Prices Move Irregularly in Narrow Confines.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—Cotton continued quiet and prices moved irregularly within a narrow range today. The close was steady at a net advance of 1 point on March but generally unchanged to 7 points lower.

Near months were relatively steady from the start on trade buying and covering. The later deliveries were easy under scattering liquidation combined with some foreign and Southern selling.

There was some selling of March early against notices estimated at about 1,400 bales and the balance of the demand from March shorts seemed to be supplied by pool brokers at about or a point or two above yesterday's closing quotation.

Wrigley Board Votes 3 Monthly Dividends

Chicago, March 24 (AP).—Directors of the William Wrigley, jr., Co. yesterday voted three monthly dividends of 25 cents each and a special dividend of 25 cents. The special was made payable May 1 to stockholders of record April 20. The monthly payments will be payable May 1, June 1 and July 1. Directors were re-elected at the annual stockholders' meeting.

Steel Activity Scores Sharp Upward Turn

Machine Tool Industry Also Advances Against General Declines.

New York, March 24.—Despite the general decline in business activity, reported in February by the National Industrial Conference Board, several industries made exceptionally good showings. Most important of these are the steel and machine tool industries.

Although some decline was noted in the steel industry in January and the first half of February, the trend has been sharply reversed since then. Steel operations for the week ended March 21 were estimated at 60 per cent of capacity, compared with 50 per cent at the end of 1935, and 47 per cent a year ago. The February rate of steel production is the highest since the summer of 1930.

Average daily production in the industry during February was 118,-710 gross tons, 5.1 per cent higher than in January, and 2.8 per cent higher than a year ago. Because of the short month, actual total output during February was slightly lower than in January.

Higher demand for construction and railroad steels are, in large measure, responsible for the increased steel activity. Orders from agricultural equipment manufacturers are being well maintained, and a seasonal revival of the automobile industry would have a further stimulating effect upon the steel industry.

Auto Financing Firms Report Busy January

New York, March 24.—Dollar volume of retail financing of new passenger automobiles during January, as reported by a representative group of large finance companies was 61 per cent larger than in January, 1935. Volume was also greater than for any January back to and including 1929, which is as far back as comparable Department of Commerce records are available.

Comparisons with volumes in previous Januaries are somewhat distorted by the fact that this year's figures reflected stimulation to the automobile business through the fall introduction of new models, according to the Standard Statistics Co. of New York.

A lapse of a month or two normally occurs before new automobile models affect registration and financing volumes. The November show in 1935 prepared the way for registrations and financing to increase earlier in the year than usual.

Warner Plans to Refund.

New York, March 24 (AP).—Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is considering the refunding of $31,924,000 in 6 per cent convertible debentures due 1939, with new convertible 4½ per cent debentures.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent

Stocks Improve in Moderate Trading; U. S. Bonds Steady; Foreign Money Holds.

New York, March 24.—Security markets sailed along much the same course that they followed yesterday and at about the same rate of speed. Government bonds were a little better, and stocks, although working generally higher, were never buoyant and acted sluggishly at times. May wheat closed half a cent higher at 97⅛ cents a bushel.

Throughout the stock trading a good deal of irregularity could be seen in prices. Rubbers turned strong on rumors of better prices. In the last hour the airplane shares came forward. Cement issues were the best in the early dealings. Farm implements were mixed. Motors were fractionally higher. General was the favorite and reached the best price since 1929 with a gain of a point or so.

Du Pont followed General Motors, but other chemical issues were mixed, as were the utilities. Telephone recovered a point or so. Columbia Gas and American Power found a good demand. Rails stiffened without much volume, but here and there a little sniping was done, as against Soo Line preferred and Seaboard Air Line.

Steel held to a narrow range. The American Iron & Steel Institute added a point to its previous estimate of this week's operating capacity, and reports from the flooded districts indicate that recovery will be rapid. However, the steel shares had only a minor setback when the bad news came along. Pullman was strong in the railroad equipments.

Treasury Finance.

The net increase in Government securities portfolios of the reporting banks was $289,000,000. In addition, the banks added $13,000,000 more Government guaranteed securities and $43,000,000 other securities. Loans to banks and miscellaneous loans were up $40,000,000 on the week, this increase undoubtedly including some Federal funds transactions.

While Government securities holdings of the member banks increased $269,000,000, those of banks in the New York district went down $33,000,000. The drop in New York was largely offset by a rise of $26,000,000 in the New York banks' holdings of Government guaranteed issues.

The remarkable thing about the increase of $269,000,00 in member bank holdings of Government securities in the week ended March 18 was the smallness of the figure, in view of the size of the Government issues offered. Evidently a great proportion of bank subscriptions were for customers' accounts, which suggests that the market for Government securities now is less dependent upon the banks than it has been.

It also bears out reports of large scale insurance company and savings bank acquisitions of new Treasury loans. Actually the banks apparently took more than the $269,-000,000 indicated net increase, for in the two weeks preceding the offering they purchased Government securities in large volume in the open market, presumably acquiring large blocks of maturing issues for the purpose of exchanging them for the new offering.

Setback.

Stocks to lose 1 to 3 points were Amerada, now quoted at more than 13 points under the best price recorded on March 11, Atlas Tack, Clark Equipment, Owens Glass, Phillip Morris and United Carbon. Gains of 1 to 4 points were made by Can, Sumatra, Checker Cab, Yellow Cab, Congoleum, Farjordo and Holland Furnace.

Without anything particular to upset confidence, prices sold off in the last half hour of trading, with some increases in activity. Losses were not great and the market was not treated to a stampede.

Foreign exchanges were firmer and no alarm is felt over the virtual certainty that peace negotiations along the German and Italian fronts necessarily require a good deal of time. Even Japanese currency rallied a little. Money markets were unchanged.

Figures of the weekly reporting banks in 101 leading cities for March 18 disclosed the changes brought about by their subscriptions to the March 16 Treasury issues, and loss of deposits and reserves through income tax payments. Reserves dropped $535,000,000; deposits, $289,000,00; domestic bank deposits, $321,000,000, and time deposits, $8,000,000, while Government deposits increased $272,000,-000, the latter item reflecting bank subscriptions paid for by book credit.

Ticker Ticks.

American Encaustic Tiling was active and strong. Shareholders will get one share of stock in the reorganized company for each ten old shares held and have the right to buy new stock at $1.50 a share. At current levels for the old stock the new will have a theoretical value of around $30 a share. New shares have been approved for listing on the Stock Exchange * * * This was the last day for dealings in Butterick. More than 7,000 shares changed hands in the first three hours, between $1.12½ and $1 a share. Based on the bid price for new stock in the over counter market, the indicated value is around 37½ cents a share. * * *

Two other stocks which are apparently out of line are Long-Bell Lumber Corporation A, listed on the stock exchange, and the new stock of the Long-Bell Co., which is traded over the counter. Back of each A share are six shares of the new common, but the A sells around 8 and the new common around 20. If the A stock is correctly priced then the indicated value of the new common would be 48; if the new common is correctly priced the indicated value of the A stock would be 3 1-3.

Wheat Rallies With Drought Talk Renewed

WeatherPessimismImparts Strengthening Trend to Prices at Chicago.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 24.—Reports that hopes of moisture relief for crops in drought regions Southwest had proved a relative failure gave wheat values a general upward trend today.

Transient setbacks of wheat prices, however, resulted at times from weakness of the rye market. Downturns of rye were ascribed to selling of that cereal against simultaneous purchasing of corn, a process due to unwinding of recent spreads.

As finally appraised by wheat traders, the only dry sections which had received adequate expected overnight moisture were northwest Kansas, western Nebraska and eastern Colorado. Moreover, the forecast pointed to fair and colder weather although unsettled in Kansas tomorrow. Under such circumstances, wheat scored a full cent a bushel maximum advance, the most of which was eventually retained.

Bouyant Weather.

Contributing to strength of wheat prices were late reports of wind damage in parts of Kansas. There were also reports of menacing presence of Hessian fly in sections of Illinois, Missouri and Kansas. Besides, field reports wired by a leading crop specialist traveling in Kansas continued to emphasize that subsoil moisture is materially below normal in large areas, and forms a threat of serious damage to wheat if not greatly improved before the start of hot weather.

Bears made no headway with an official statement from Washington suggesting likelihood of a United States wheat crop this season totaling 880,000,000 bushels. The tentative estimate was based on assumption of average yield and on carrying out of farmers' intentions to plant.

Corn and oats sympathized with wheat prices upturns. Provisions averaged higher, owing a good deal to aggressive buying on the part of trade interests.

London, March 24.—Transatlantic shares were better after some irregularity on the stock exchange yesterday. Dealings generally were narrow, awaiting the clearing up of the international situation. Gilt-edged securities maintained a steady tone, while other sections of the list sagged. The closing was quiet.

Paris—International issues advanced, while rentes declined fractionally in a quiet session in the bourse. The market closed steady.

Liverpool—After an early dip, wheat futures steadied on Chinese buying of Australian wheat and firmer Canadian offers. Cotton trading was quiet and featureless, outside interests awaiting fresh incentives. The closing was unchanged to 3 points lower.

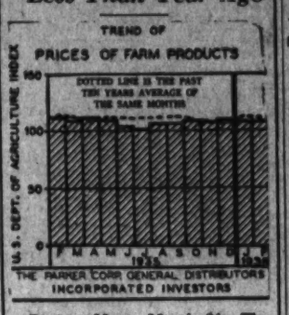
Farm Prices 2% Less Than Year Ago



Boston, Mass., March 24.—The February index of farm prices by the Department of Agriculture was nearly two per cent lower than in February last year. Compared with this, the Department of Labor's index of wholesale commodity prices was just slightly higher than a year ago. The largest drop compared with last year was in truck crops which went off 60 per cent.

Crude Oil Output Grosses Higher

New York, March 24.—Daily average gross crude oil production in the United States increased 27,600 barrels in the week ended March 21, totaling 2,835,950 barrels, the American Petroleum Institute's weekly summary indicates. Daily average production east of California increased 28,300 barrels to 2,270,050 barrels.

Reports received from refining companies owning 89.6 per cent of the estimated daily potential refining capacity, and which was operated at 75.5 per cent of potential, indicate that the industry as a whole ran to stills 2,815,000 barrels daily. The daily average for the previous week, based upon refineries representing 89.6 per cent of the total capacity and which operated at 75.5 per cent of their capacity was 2,815,000 barrels.

Finished and unfinished gasoline stocks at refineries, terminals, in transit and in pipe lines totaled 73,157,000 barrels as of the end of the week, compared with 72,722,000 barrels as of the end of the previous week.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, March 24 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agri.).—Damages to wool mills caused by recent floods reduced the already greatly decreased call for wool in the Boston market. Some interest, however, was still apparent, but the particular types of wool requested were not available in most houses at prices within recently quoted ranges. Holders of the bulk of the remaining limited supply of old wool continued to ask higher prices than buyers have previously been willing to pay.

Radiator's Net Nearly Double That of 1934

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation, a leading producer of building accessories with widely distributed manufacturing operations, reports a 1935 net profit of $2,798,860, which compares with $1,435,227 for 1934.

After providing for dividends on the 7 per cent prefered stock there was a balance for the common stock equal to 24 cents a share. The 1934 profit amounted to $3.04 a share on the preferred.

Continental Oil Co., producer and refiner of petroleum with distributing outlets in 30 States, reports net earnings for 1935 of $5,-813,560, the largest since 1929. The profit, which was equal to $1.88 a share on the capital stock, included nonrecurring profits of $1,564,607 resulting from the sale of certain property. In 1934 the company's earnings totaled $4,865,357 or $1.03 a share.

Asphalt Nets .46.

General Asphalt Co., and subsidiaries, producing roofing, petroleum and asphalts and with principal plants in New Jersey and Trinidad, B. W. I., reported 1935 consolidated net income of $153,435, equal to 40 cents a share, compared with net loss of $296,588 in 1934.

United American Bosch Corporation, makers of magnetos and other products with plants in Springfield and Chicopee, Mass., reported 1935 net profit of $250,130, equal to 90 cents a share. No provision for Federal income tax has been made, owing to the fact that allowable depreciation on property write-downs previously made and deductable losses charged against reserves exceed the net income shown above. In 1934 net profit totaled $50,101, or 18 cents a share.

Legal Notices

W. GWYNN GARDINER, Attorney,
729 Fifteenth Street Northwest.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT of Columbia, holding an Equity Court. Joseph Burkart, plaintiff, vs. Great National Insurance Co., a corporation, defendant. Equity No. 53757. Reference to auditor and notice of publication. Application having been made herein for authority to ascertain the amounts due the various creditors and to limit the time for the filing of claims in said case against the receiver and the funds in his possession as such receiver and held by him under prior orders of this court, it is, by the Court, this 24th day of March, 1936, ordered, that all persons having claims against the Great National Insurance Co., a corporation, or the receiver of the said corporation, Joseph Oliver, file the same duly authenticated in the above entitled cause not later than April 20, 1936; otherwise they shall be debarred from making any claim to any of the funds in said cause; provided, however, notice shall be given to all persons in interest by publication in The Washington Post and the Washington Law Reporter once a week for three successive weeks. It is further ordered that said cause is hereby referred to the auditor of this court for the purpose of ascertaining the amounts to be allowed to each and every claimant claiming an interest in said fund, with instructions to report to the court the total amount of said claims, the parties to whom the same are payable, and the amount justly due each claimant filing his said claim in said cause. By the Court: PEYTON GORDON, Justice. A true copy. Test: (Seal.) FRANK M. CUNNINGHAM, Clerk. By RICHARD J. KIRKLAND, Assistant Clerk.

House Passes Rail Haul Bill; Vote 215 to 41

Repeal Measure Approved to Allow Lower Rates on Longer Routes.

By the Associated Press.

The House yesterday sent the controverted rail long and short haul repeal bill along to the Senate by a 215 to 41 standing vote.

Representative Pettengill (Democrat), Indiana, and other backers of the bill to permit railroads to charge less for a long haul than for a shorter one over the same route in the same direction had counted on only a 3 to 1 vote for the measure. Nine attempts to modify the bill were beaten back, with cries of "Vote! Vote!" cutting off discussion.

A record vote was not asked. Further, the bill's proponents asserted an informal poll of the Senate had shown sufficient strength to assure passage in that branch. Representative Holmes (Republican), Massachusetts, sought unsuccessfully to send the bill back to the Interstate Commerce Committee for substitution of a proposal that would eliminate an interstate commerce act provision requiring the Interstate Commerce Committee to grant lower long haul rate exceptions only when "reasonably compensatory" and not merely to meet potential water competition.

Party Lines Crossed.

Proponents have contended the railroads, hampered by the present band against charging less to a distant coastal point than to intermediate stations, could not longer live against water and other competition under such restrictions.

Opponents retorted the rails sought leeway to drive rates down to water competing points, to a level that would run water carriers out of business, and then make up the losses on interior traffic.

Party lines were crossed in consideration of the legislation. Except for Holmes' proposal, all the amendments were fired at the bill alternately by Chairman Bland (Democrat), Virginia, of the Merchant Marine Committee, and Representative Gearhart (Republican), California.

Burden of Proof Issue.

They contended their amendatory efforts were to make sure that railroads did not put rates into effect discriminatory to interior points and throw on the shippers or communities the burden of showing them to be discriminatory. The measure stipulates that the burden of proof shall be on the railroads.

The shippers or communities affected, opponents contended, would have to stand the expense of protesting, and might not even know about the new rates until, as Bland argued, "they go down to the freight office to get a piece of freight and find they are stuck with a higher charge."

Bland, as a final vote drew near, soberly sent up to the clerk's desk an amendment providing, among other things, that "this act shall be known as an act to destroy the American merchant marine." Like most of the others, it went out on a voice vote.

Lamson

The jury received the case at 1:45 last Friday.

Lamson was nervous as he waited. Extra guards were on hand. Lamson's attorney, Leo R. Friedman, said a "certain person" might attempt to harm the defendant if he were acquitted.

Trial Judge J. J. Trabucco instructed the jury to bring in one of five verdicts: Guilty as charged with hanging the penalty; guilty, with life imprisonment; guilty of second degree, five years; manslaughter, one to ten years—or freedom.

Saturday the jury was reported to have reached a verdict. Instead, it asked new instructions. Still later it asked that thousands of words of evidence be read.

Twice the jury reported a stalemate but Judge Trabucco refused to discharge them.

"This case," he said, "has been tried four times at tremendous expense. It is up to you men and women to bring in a verdict."

Lamson's fate now remains uncertain. Because of the tremendous cost of his previous trials and the State's inability to obtain a conviction, it was believed certain the defendant would be discharged. It was not revealed immediately, however, whether the murder indictment would be quashed.

Moses Revives Year-Old Feud, Blaming Bridge Delay on Ickes

Interior Secretary and Tuttle, New York PWA Engineer, More Interested in Lead Pencils, Says State Park Official.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—The year-old dispute of Robert Moses, New York's park commissioner and member of the Triborough Bridge Authority, with Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes flared anew today, with Moses charging Ickes was delaying completion of the $53,000,000 bridge.

Moses' complaint went to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

He protested Ickes' orders that Wharton Green, resident PWA engineer, must report to Arthur S. Tuttle, State PWA engineer, instead of directly to Washington.

"All Tuttle and Ickes seem to be interested in," Moses said, "is how much we pay for lead pencils. They don't care a damn about anything of any consequence."

The order on Green's reports, he said, would delay the bridge's completion and the project would "get a black eye which it might never get over" if the approaches were not completed in time for the Olympic trials on Randall's Island this summer.

"Why did Ickes do this? As well ask why the inmates of the Central Islip Hospital for the insane throw plates around," Moses said.

A year ago Ickes threatened to hold up Federal funds for the Triborough Bridge, linked Queens County, the Bronx and Manhattan, unless Moses gave up his post either as city park commissioner or as a member of the bridge authority.

Moses refused to do either, and then told Mayor LaGuardia he would resign as park commissioner unless the mayor reappointed him to the bridge authority.

The mayor capitulated, Moses was reappointed, and the funds finally were released.

Wires Seized, Texan Assails Black Inquiry

Denunciaton of activities of the Black Senate lobby investgating committee came from another source last night, shortly after the House Rules Committee had provided a clear track to the House floor for the antilobbying bill of Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), Alexandria, Va.

J. H. Allison, vice president of the Times Publishing Co., of Wchita Falls, Tex., whose telegrams had been seized and examined by the Black committee, wrote ot Chairman Hugo Black (Democrat), Alabama:

"For audacity, brazenness and inconsiderateness you and your committee have no equal. The regimes of Stalin, of Russa; Hitler, of Germany, and Mussolni, of Italy, have nothing on your committee.

"What right is t of your to pry into my personal affars, sub penaeing my telegrams to Washington, having slipped them away and slipped them back before I was aware of your contemptble act."

The Rules Committee reported out the Smith bill, under a two-hour limitation on debate, and is expected to call up the measure on the floor today or tomorrow.

Antilobbying legislation was given a clear track in the House yesterday when the Rules Committee reported out, under a two-hour limitation of debate, the measure introduced by Representative Howard W. Smith, of Alexandria, Va. The bill is expected to be called up on the floor of the House by Rules Chairman O'Connor today or tomorrow.

Smith's bill is not so stringent as legislation introduced by Senator Black (Democrat), of Alabama. The former requires organizations collecting funds for use in influencing legislation to file financial statements periodically with the clerk of the House. Paid representatives of persons or organizations who seek to influence legislation would have to register complete details of their employment. They also would be required to file with both the House and Senate explanations of their financial receipts and expenditures.

Senator Black's bill, while providing for the registration of persons and organizatons attempting to influence legislation, would apply with equal force to those appearing before Federal departments and commissions. His bill also carries a $5,000 fine and a year imprisonment for violations, while the milder Smith measure would exact only a $1,000 fine, with or without a year imprisonment.

Meanwhile, Col. Cramton Harris, committee counsel, prepared to file a reply to the suit of William Randolph Hearst for an injunction restraining the committee from making any use of Hearst organization telegrams and from seeking to obtain additional messages. After spending most of the day working in the Senate library, he revealed that the committee's objections to the issuance of a preliminary injunction probably will be filed before Friday. The case will then he scheduled for oral argument in the District Supreme Court.

Pauline Chellis Brings Humor, Satire in Dance

500 See Fifth Recital of Season for Howard School of Music.

Pauline Chellis, a young dancer with a flare for humor, brought the Howard University School of music its fifth recital of the season last night. She danced before an audience of 500 persons in Armstrong High School Auditorium.

In a musically light program the artist showed pronounced ppersonality. She brought together, for example, little pieces of Bach and Prokofieff to point out in dance routine certain similarities between the eighteenth and twentieth century composers.

She featured a number called "Three Madrigals," in which she summed up the feminism of three ages 1600, 1890 and 1935. Deftly and clearly she portrayed the three types, using some satire to add punch to her interpretations. She danced the air of freeedom into her modern woman, using as musical background Cole Porter's hit tune "What Is This Thing Called Love?"

Then in the manner of a very young girl at her first dance she turned to the "Portland Fancy." She tripped it earnestly, introducing humor, not because it was an old-fashioned kind of dance, but because the reel was something to be taken so seriously.

In the first half of her program were two groups, one a Dance Prelude by Pouleno, and the other a Cycle of four numbers.

Sixth of Fast Cruisers Is Launched in France

Saint Nazaire, France, March 24 (AP).—Francois Pietri, minister of the navy, and other high officials watched the launching today of the 7,720-ton George Leygues, the sixth and last in a series of swift cruisers completed in the last five years.

The six are capable of a speed of 32 knots and are designed to match six German cruisers of the Leipzig type.

Woman, Praying, Hit By Bolt, Walks Again

Keyport, N. J., March 24 (AP).—A flash of lightning as she lay in bed praying was credited today by Miss Adeline Slover, 40, with restoring to her the use of limbs she said were crippled for 15 years.

"It was a miracle sent from Heaven," she exclaimed today as she demonstrated to friends that she could walk unassisted, the first time, she said, since she suffered an attack of arthritis when she was 25 years old.

"I was saying the Lord's Prayer in bed Friday night," she explained, "when a bolt of lightning seemed to strike outside my window. It flashed before my face and I fell back stunned. Then I began to shake all over."

Soon she "had a feeling" in her arms and legs, she said, and the next morning found she could move them.

Stretz Murder Jury Selected; Case Outlined

Stenographer Again Weeps as State Accuses Her in Gebhardt Killing.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 24.—Dazed and weeping, a comely stenographer today heard the beginning of testimony designed to send her to the electric chair because she ended an illicit office romance with bullets.

Several times the 31-year-old college-educated defendant, Vera Stretz, appeared on the verge of collapse as the State began unfolding evidence in support of its charge that she murdered Dr. Fritz Gebhardt, German industrialist, wartime flying ace, and father of two children.

With a "blue ribbon" jury finally completed after three days' effort, Dr. Milton Halprin, assistant medical examiner, testified that Dr. Gebhardt was killed by four bullets fired into his body at close range.

Before he took the stand, Assistant District Attorney Miles O'Brien described the finding of Dr. Gebhardt's body, clad in a nightgown, in the bedroom of his expensive East Side tower apartment last November 12. He told how Miss Stretz was arrested, revolver in bag, on a fire escape of the building shortly afterward.

"And," he said, and gestured toward the sobbing stenographer, "we have from the defendant's own lips the statement that she shot Gebhardt."

Through her attorney, Samuel S. Leibowitz, Miss Stretz has indicated she would base her hope of acquittal on the contention that she fired to protect herself from unnatural advances.

In his opening, Prosecutor O'Brien did not tell the jury what he expected to prove in the way of a motive, but he did refer to a series of amorous letters exchanged between the two, which he said were found in her room.

Miss Stretz, wearing a printed dress of greenish-blue which accented the pallor of her face, resorted frequently to smelling salts as Dr. Halprin described the autopsy performed on her former employer's body.

Mostly, she kept her swollen eyelids tightly shut and seemed to be trying to concentrate on anything but what was going on around her in the dingy courtroom opposite the Tombs.

Dance and Stay Young, Advises WPA Speaker

Is Great Aid to Happiness, Dr. Linderman Tells Recreation Group.

People who wish to stay young should trip the light fantastic as the years pile up, Dr. E. C. Linderman, WPA leisure director, advised last night.

He lauded the value of dancing after middle age, in a speech before the Recreation Institute of the community center department in Franklin School.

"We ought to dance until we stop living," he said.

"Why, when I was in Guatemala I noticed as many old Indians as young danced in the tribal rites. They have the right idea. They don't stop dancing when they reach 30 or 40.

"It's too bad, all this lack of symmetry imposed on us by machines and by the curious conventions of our national life."

By the Associated Press.

The controverted Copeland ship subsidy bill, intended to replace existing ocean mail contracts, was reported favorably yesterday by the Senate Commerce Committee, only to be met by the threat of a fatal filibuster.

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, visibly aroused after two defeats at a heated late afternoon committee meeting, emerged with an announcement that he would filibuster the measure "to death." So many disputes have surrounded the ship subsidy subject that final action at this session has become a matter of conjecture.

Even Chairman Copeland (Democrat), of New York, of the Commerce Committee, who has battled for the legislation for two sessions, appeared none too sanguine.

"It depends on the President," he said.

In a series of votes yesterday, the Commerce Committee first ballotted 11 to 7 against substituting the differing Guffey ship subsidy bill for the Copeland measure; then voted 12 to 7 to report the Copeland legislation, and finally, by 8 to 7, approved a resolution calling upon the Secretary of Commerce to submit data on the profits of ships subsidized under existing ocean mail contracts, and other information.

Maximum 50 Per Cent Subsidy.

The Copeland bill, on which a deadlock between the Commerce and Postoffice Departments finally was broken by a compromise, would allow a maximum 50 per cent subsidy for construction of new merchant marine vessels, and an operating subsidy sufficient to offset lower foreign costs. In addition, ship owners could borrow from the Government 75 per cent of the money they had to put up to match Federal grants.

The bill by Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, would limit to 33 1-3 per cent the Government grants for construction subsidy. Similar to the Copeland bill in some other respects, it would provide, however, that in the event private capital is not interested in the terms offered, the Government could step in and build its ships and operate them until capital should take a hand.

On March 31, barely a week away, the President's authority to cancel existing ocean mail contracts expires. Furthermore, the Senate recently struck out a $26,500,000 item from the Postoffice appropriation bill, designed to carry on the mail subsidy in event of failure of substitute legislation.

Life Span

"And it is all the more significant because of the fact that, in these experiments, development is expedited and senility deferred in the same individuals, so that what, for lack of a better term we may call 'the period of the prime' is extended in greater artion than the life cycle itself.

"Thus in typical cases the same degree of incipient senility which is reached by normal individuals on adequate diet at an age corresponding to about 65 years in the human life is deferred on the optimum diet to an age corresponding to 75 to 80 years."

For Digestion's Sake—smoke Camels

Our modern "eat-and-run" way of living, with its extraordinary stresses and strains, is hard on digestion. Hence unusual interest attaches to the experiences of those who have found a means of easing the strain. Otis Barton, daring scientist-inventor of the "bathysphere" (right), has plunged over 3000 feet down into the ocean depths—a strenuous test of physical condition and digestion. He says: "I smoke Camels during and after meals. They taste swell and help to make digestion easier."

SEE FOR YOURSELF how Camels set you right! They promote good digestion and give a cheering "lift." Camels are so mild you can smoke them steadily without upsetting your nerves.
